ABSTRACT

The 1972 Handbook includes, for the first time, 2- and 4-year colleges that are not members of the College Board and do not use its tests and other services. The listing for each college includes: a brief general description; information concerning curriculum; admissions and student life; annual expenses; financial aid programs; and the addresses of the admissions officers. College Entrance Examination Board
New York, 1972

The College Entrance Examination Board is a nonprofit membership organization that provides tests and other educational services for students, schools, and colleges. The membership is composed of more than 1,600 colleges, schools, school systems, and education associations. Representatives of the members serve on committees that consider the Board's programs and participate in the determination of its policies and activities.

Beginning this book

"The communication gap in our society," wrote a high school senior, "is definitely more acute than the generation gap.
The College Handbook is the finest source of information about colleges I have found."

Colleges have been using this book to communicate with schools and their students for more than 30 years. It is prepared and published by the colleges themselves, working together through the College Entrance Examination Board, and a complimentary copy of each new edition is sent to all secondary schools for use by their students.

The Handbook has changed so much since the first edition in 1941 that it is fair to say its content and purpose have actually reversed direction in almost every important respect. The first edition was small, only 171 pages, and it described just 43 colleges—the "selective" institutions for which 16,000 applicants would take College Board tests that academic year. The Handbook listed the colleges' formal course and test requirements, so that schools would know what to teach applicants, but said little or nothing about their students or the classroom programs and other activities on and off campus in which the students participated. The communication was one-way and one-sided. Going to college was that way for many young people in 1941.

Even so, the editor of the Handbook could point out that college-going was easier for the applicant in 1941 than it had been for his father and grandfather. Why? Because a growing number of colleges, beginning with the founding of the College Board in 1900, had agreed to use the same testing program for admission. This single set of tests, developed cooperatively by colleges that were members of the College Board, replaced the separate tests, based on different preparatory courses, that each college had previously required. "The chaos that prevailed 40 years ago in the schools preparing students to enter college by examination is hard for the present generation to imagine," wrote the editor in 1941. "There was no agreement as to what subjects were necessary, nor what the contents of these subjects should be." The colleges made all the choices—of studies and students—and the schools and applicants played a guessing game.

Readers of this new Handbook will find it describes a very different world of colleges, one that expects students to make choices based on their own interests and needs. The book starts with a reminder to the individual that decisions about education are his alone to make. Choices should be carefully related to the extensive factual information that the colleges have supplied about themselves if the first steps away from school are to lead as directly as possible toward the kind of learning and life the young person believes will be best for him.

It has taken 30 years for the colleges and schools, working together in College Board committees, to develop the system of information for students that the Handbook now makes available. The verbal part of the system, consisting of the 2,019 college descriptions in the first volume, greatly exceeds the coverage of the original Handbook; the kinds of tabular information in the second volume were first used in the 1969 edition, and the maps showing towns in which colleges are located appear in 1972 for the first time. The most important departure from 1941, however, was a change in attitude in the 1951 edition, the first to be based firmly on the principle that the book's purpose is to supply information that will help students make good college choices.

The College Board president declared that this move toward the student reader really called for an entirely new publication. He described the old version as "merely a compendium of formal statements of entrance requirements, totally uninformative as to the features, the programs, or the environment of the colleges listed, presented with all the refulgence and poetic sweep of catalog prose—in short, incredibly dull and forbidding." He welcomed the 1951 edition as a "new medium of communication," calling attention to its additional information on each college's special features and strengths, study programs, expenses, financial aids, and admissions procedures.

The thinking of many leaders in College Board work soon went far beyond these verbal generalizations about students and entrance requirements. Fascinated by the promise they saw in using the universal language of the test scores to describe each college's freshman class, they argued for inclusion of score data in the Handbook. At a 1955 meeting of the Board colleges, a highly experienced admissions officer who had helped plan the 1951 edition likened the process of applying to college to that of gambling on a horse race. In a period when applicants were competing for college places, she emphasized that each school was forced to guess the odds for and against admission of its applicants, basing the guess on what had happened to other seniors applying to the same colleges with similar grades and test scores in earlier years. The applicants themselves were gambling blindly because their test scores were not revealed to them. At that time the scores were reported to schools and colleges on a confidential basis. To students they were a mystery at best and at worst a threat.

"If I interpret certain trends correctly," the admissions officer suggested, "colleges will have to choose between a publication over which they will have full control and a whole rash of commercial dope sheets where colleges will be 'rated,' and will be relegated to lists and check marks in boxes. Information will be inaccurate and out of date, the colleges will have no control over the material which is published, and the consuming public will pay fancy prices for a mass of misinformation. The surest way to prevent this is to publish our own straightforward and accurate document."

Fourteen years later the 1969 edition of the Handbook became that kind of publication after several important College Board actions in the intervening years had made the transformation possible. The first, carried by a narrow vote in 1956, permitted schools and colleges to report the test scores to their students, a move described by the president of the Board as breaking "a taboo of silence that the schools and colleges had joined to create, which excluded the candidate from highly significant information as to his chances of success in college and the reasons for his admission or rejection by a given college."

Whether the taboo had been destroyed or gone underground remained debatable until the 1969 edition of the Handbook. Before then, the applicant received a booklet that explained how his scores compared statistically with those of all students nationally but not with those of other applicants to the colleges in which he was interested. Some of the colleges supplied score descriptions of their students to guidance counselors, starting in 1961, in the College Board's first Manual of Freshman Class Profiles, but limited their use to school and college officers for professional purposes. The parts of the college-going picture came closer together with publication of the Manual but the individual student was still not a conspicuous part of it.

Strange as this treatment of students now seems, it seemed even stranger at the time that the traditionally secretive colleges would agree to reveal the academic characteristics of their applicants and enrolled students. Some admissions officers expressed the fear that reporting a relatively low student score average would "type" their institutions as inferior and discourage high-scoring students from attending. Other college spokesmen were reluctant to reveal high scores on the ground that this would intimidate many students, including some the colleges would want to consider and accept. "Never in my wildest dreams," wrote a veteran admissions officer, "did I believe that more than a few of the College Board colleges would agree to publish in common reports on freshman classes."

Published they were, though, by an increasing number of colleges, first in annual editions of the Manual and finally, in 1969, in the Handbook. In the eight years between, the arguments against publishing the scores had not changed much, but the number of schools and colleges favoring publication had grown steadily. And the "commercial dope sheets" forecast 14 years earlier had appeared and were being bought by students and parents who hoped to improve their chances of admission by basing their college choices on factual information. They realized that the test scores communicated both ways, describing not only student abilities but college requirements. At last the tests the student had been compelled to take were helping him to plan realistically.

The question was settled by a poll of Board members in 1968. Should score information supplied voluntarily by colleges be made available to the general public through the Handbook? More than two-thirds of the Board's 1,111 voting representatives answered "Yes," and with that action the transformation of the Handbook was almost complete.

The completeness is achieved in the 1972 edition, the first to include two-year and four-year colleges that are not members of the College Board and do not make use of its tests and other services. With this change, the Handbook has become a guide for all students who wish to consider all recognized colleges that are interested in receiving inquiries from them. This is true to the purpose of the College Board, for it was founded to facilitate the transition of students from school to college.

Most responsible for the metamorphosis of the book during the past 30 years have been the colleges themselves, as personified by the thousands of men and women who worked—and fought—their way through the stages of improvement represented by successive editions. Very prominent spokesmen for such a book in the early years were William Allan Neilson, president emeritus of Smith College, the first editor, and Professor George W. Mullins, of Barnard College, who as executive secretary of the College Board led the move to publish the Handbook in 1941.

The principal planners of the reformed 1951 edition were two admissions officers and two College Board staff members. Eugene S. Wilson, of Amherst College, and Mary E. Chase, of Wellesley College, wrote the first college descriptions intended for students, and these statements were used as guides by other colleges contributing to the book. William C. Fels, secretary of the Board, as editor, was responsible for fulfillment of the plan for the new Handbook, and Frank Bowles, then director and later president of the Board, for recognizing the need to aim the book toward students.

Miss Chase soon reappeared as a champion of improved guidance information in her support of a score-based publication, quoted above. This materialized as the Manual of Freshman Class Profiles, authorized by the Board in 1960 and compiled by staff members John M. Duggan, director of guidance services, and Douglas D. Dillenbeck, assistant director. When the Manual was published the following fall, consisting of profiles of 128 freshman classes, it was described as "an important source of factual information with which to assist students in planning realistically for college."

From the first edition, the number of colleges participating in the Manual increased steadily, and it seemed inevitable that the information soon would be supplied directly to students in the Handbook. The kinds of information that might be reported were discussed at length by the Committee on Guidance and at College Board regional meetings, and a miniature experimental version of such a Handbook, limited to Indiana colleges, was successfully tested with students in that state. When a survey of 5,200 secondary schools that had used the Manual showed that over three-quarters believed students and parents should have access to freshman class information, the Committee on Guidance recommended unanimously that it be published in the Handbook and that the Manual be discontinued. The Board members approved the change, and it was made in the 1969 edition. Three-quarters of the colleges volunteered score information about their students, confirming the hopes held by the Committee, chaired by Loren L. Benson, of the Hopkins, Minnesota, school system; by Douglas D. Dillenbeck, then director of the Board's guidance services; and by Richard Pearson, president of the Board.

The 1972 edition combines the efforts of all those past contributors with a new infusion of energy and enthusiasm by a small corps of publication professionals. Joining Mr. Dillenbeck as co-editor is Sue Wetzel, the Board's assistant managing editor, who has coordinated the work of all persons actively involved with the new edition—from the college officers who assembled the information to the craftsmen who converted it into printed pages, all intact, on schedule, and ready for students at the beginning of the new school year. Editorial work on the statements submitted by colleges was divided among Board associate editor Marcia Schlafmitz and editorial assistant Georgia Stribling, former Board editors Brenda Jones and Barbara Weidenfeld, who were recalled to duty temporarily, and free-lance editors James Herod and Frank Kirk. Reading the proof set from some 50,000 pages of manuscript were free-lance specialists, Helen Lowenhar, Josephine Mintzer, and Kathryn E. Pearcy. Andrea Tobias, editorial clerk-typist, kept a close and cheerful watch on all phases of proof from day to day and helped process the thousands of tables computed for the colleges by Educational Testing Service. Most visible to the reader are the contributions of cartographer Francis Barkoczy and book designer Freeman Craw, who has been responsible for the cover design and format of many editions of the Handbook.

In many ways, the 1972 edition completes a process involving both aspiration and accomplishment, for the book and for the Board itself. The members and staff of the Board offer this edition to students and their parents with hope that it will prove useful to them.

Finding colleges that are right for you

by Douglas D. Dillenbeck

How do you decide?

With 2,700 colleges to choose from, where do you begin? With yourself! Your first step is to think about what is important to you. Why are you going to college? What do you hope to get out of it?

hat are the best colleges in the country? Ask that question of a counselor, a teacher, a college admissions officer—any of the people who help students like you every day in their choices of colleges—and the chances are that they will answer you with another question. Best for what? Or best for whom? Colleges are different from each other in many ways and for many reasons. The big reason, though, is that they have different aims and try to serve different students in different ways. As a result, you and other students who plan to go to college in the United States are faced with a wider range of choices than the students anywhere else in the world. Specifically, there are about 2,700 colleges for high school graduates in this country—almost all of them for both men and women—and no two are alike. You will find them big and small, nearby and distant, free and expensive, selective and wide open, diverse in curriculums and highly specialized, and sectarian and nonsectarian, to mention just a few of the ways they differ from each other.

This book will help you consider what kind of college would most probably be best for you, find colleges like that to consider attending, and then begin the process of applying for admission and financial aid (if you need it).

Deciding about colleges

The choice of a college is an important decision that every student must make for himself. It can make the difference between success and failure, between a happy time and a bad one, between personal progress and aimless floundering. It is no wonder that so many students spend so much time trying to decide on their answer to this important question—where to go to college.

What is a good decision?

It is easy to look back and recognize decisions you are glad you made. You think they were good decisions because they turned out the way you wanted them to. You can probably also remember decisions that you now consider bad ones because they did not turn out well. But it is not usually so easy to look ahead and tell how some decisions that you make today will turn out in the future.

Choosing a college is that kind of decision. You can't be sure how it will turn out. For one thing, you are a changing person, and what seems important to you now may seem less important when you get to college and acquire new outlooks, new interests, and new friends. Colleges change too, and the college you decide to go to may be a somewhat different place by the time you get there. Finally, it is rarely possible to predict with much certainty what will happen when a particular person and a particular college act upon each other—or even when a certain kind of person goes to a certain kind of college.

In such a situation, when you are making a decision about your future, the best decision is the one that gives you the best chance of getting the results you want most. When the decision is about which college to go to, you choose the college where you are most likely to achieve whatever important purposes you have in going to college.

How to judge the prospects at different colleges

There are three essential ingredients in a decision about college. First, you need to think about your purpose—why you are planning to go to college, what you want to get out of it. Most people have several purposes, big and little, immediate and long-range, so you also need to think about what is most important to you and what you can do without if you can't get everything.

Another ingredient is to recognize and consider all the choices or options that are available to you. One common mistake that students make is to overlook colleges that might be excellent choices for them. You can avoid this mistake by considering all the colleges in the country as possible choices initially and then, step by step, eliminating those that would not serve your purpose. For example, you start with the 2,700 colleges given in the master list in Part 2 and then eliminate those that are located in states or regions that you do not wish to consider further, and then eliminate those that do not offer the educational program you want, and then eliminate those that take only students of the opposite sex, and so on, always keeping alive all the options that you have not eliminated for some specific reason. The important thing is not to "lose" any of the good possibilities by simply never thinking about them because your system for identifying the options is haphazard rather than systematic.

The third ingredient in the decision is your estimate of the chances that you would attain your objectives if you chose, in turn, each of the colleges you are considering. To do this, you need information about each of the colleges—the particular information that helps you judge the chances of getting what you want. For example, if your main purpose is to find opportunities to explore three or four fields of study and career fields that you are interested in, you need to know if the colleges you are considering offer courses in those fields. If your main purpose is to qualify for admission to medical school, you need information about the availability of the college courses generally required for admission to medical schools and perhaps about the experience of each college's previous applicants to medical schools. If you are uncertain about your ability to succeed in the programs or colleges that you are considering, you want information about the success of previous students in these programs and colleges whose academic qualifications were similar to yours.

To sum up, if you make a thoughtful decision about what you want to get out of college, consider all the colleges where you might achieve your purpose, and use all the available information to judge which of the possible colleges offer you the best chances of achieving your purpose, you will make the best decision that is possible under the circumstances. There is no guarantee that it will turn out just as you wanted, but you will have given yourself the best chance that it will—a far better chance than if you had based your decision on a hunch or a whim or even on the advice of someone else who may not have really understood what you were after.

To help you make decisions about colleges, you need facts – and that's where the Handbook can help you. But how do you sort out all the information given in the Handbook? There's a way, and it involves knowing what's in the college descriptions and what it means to you.

Using The College Handbook in choosing colleges

The information in The College Handbook was selected and arranged to contribute directly to two of the ingredients of a good decision—identifying the options and judging them in the light of your own purposes and goals. The Handbook can't help you decide what your goals are. That is a task for you, and one in which you will probably want to get ideas, advice, and other kinds of help from your parents, your friends, your teachers, and your school counselor. (It would be a mistake, though, to think that you had to have a definite plan for your career and your education before you could choose a college. In fact one of your objectives might be to gain further time, experience, and assistance at college in planning for your future.) When you have at least done some preliminary thinking about goals, though, you are ready to use the information in the Handbook to identify and evaluate colleges that might suit you. No single system of using the information can be recommended for everyone, but the description that follows of what is in the Handbook will enable you to see how you can use it best. Following this description, there is some advice about applying for admission and applying for financial aid.

The Handbook is bound in two parts for your convenience. Part 1 consists mainly of the descriptions supplied by 2,019 colleges in response to a detailed questionnaire that was sent to all the undergraduate colleges listed in the 1970-71 edition of Education Directory: Higher Education published by the United States Office of Education. Also included are some colleges that qualified early in the year for listing in the 1971-72 edition of that directory. The colleges supplied the information during the 1971-72 academic year. These descriptions follow a common outline of main topics and subtopics to make it easy to find a particular item of information in any description or to compare one college with another in respect to a particular characteristic. Part 2 has three sections. It contains tables supplied by some of the colleges to supplement their descriptions in Part 1, showing admissions test scores, high school rank or grade averages, and other information about their recent applicants for admission and enrolled freshmen; a master list of all the two-year and four-year colleges in the country that offer undergraduate programs and are recognized by the United States Office of Education for listing in its annual official directory of colleges; and individual maps of the 50 states and Puerto Rico, showing the cities and towns in which colleges are located.

The college descriptions

The 2,019 colleges with individual descriptions in Part 1 all responded to a questionnaire that was then used to write their statements. Each college's statement is in the section for the state (or District of Columbia or Puerto Rico) where it is located. Within each state section, the colleges are listed alphabetically by their official names. Branches of a complex institution are usually grouped in sequence under the name of the parent institution. However, the descriptions of units of a state system are customarily spaced throughout their state section by individual name as, for instance, Fresno State College and San Francisco State College, to name two. If you do not find the description of a particular college you are looking for, the master list in Part 2 provides the means for rapid scanning of a state section to determine whether there is a description of the college in Part 1 and, if so, the name used in determining the position of its description in the alphabetic sequence. If you do not know the state in which the college is located, the Index in Part 1 lists all the colleges with descriptive statements and shows their states.

Each statement begins with a few items of general information, after which there are sections on the following subjects: curriculum, admissions, student life, annual expenses, financial aid, and correspondence or where to write for more information.

The general information at the beginning is to enable you to classify the college quickly according to certain major characteristics—that is, whether it is a two-year or a four-year college, public or private, church-affiliated or not, and for men or women or both. In addition, this section tells the number of undergraduates enrolled in the college, customarily including both full-time and part-time students; numbers of students enrolled in graduate study; information about its academic calendar (see the Glossary beginning on page xxvii for explanation of unfamiliar terms), including the availability of a summer session; and a description of the nature and location of its community. Colleges could, if they chose to, identify themselves as predominantly black in this section, and they could also describe special features or other information not called for in other sections of the statement.

Curriculum. The first major heading in each statement introduces the information on courses of study offered by the college—an important factor in almost everyone's choice of college, and sometimes the only important factor. The first subhead, "Undergraduate degrees offered," is usually followed by "associate," or "bachelor," or both. The associate's degrees, such as Associate in Arts and Associate in Science, are usually awarded on the completion of a two-year program in a community college, a junior college, or a two-year division of a university. The bachelor's degrees are usually awarded on the completion of a four-year program in a college or university, although there are a few programs leading to such degrees in only three years and others that require five years to complete. Some colleges also reported that they award certificates or diplomas on completion of certain programs. Their own catalogs are the best place to find more information about these programs.

The next subhead, "Fields of study," is followed by a list of the curriculums in which undergraduates can specialize in the college. These are grouped into broad fields so that closely related subjects will usually be found together in the statement. Colleges were asked to report their curriculums by checking a standard list, even though their own titles for some of the programs —and perhaps the contents of the programs, too —might not exactly fit the titles on the list. However, colleges could and did also add the names of other curriculums. You may notice, too, that two-year colleges have sometimes listed curriculums that normally require four years or more to complete, such as engineering and education. Such programs in two-year colleges are called "transfer" or "university-parallel" curriculums, and the program in the two-year college is like the first two years of the similarly named program in four-year colleges. If you were interested in one of these curriculums, one of your options would be to begin it in a two-year college and then, after two years, transfer to a four-year college to complete it.

Next under Curriculum is the subhead, "Special programs," under which a college could indicate that it offered any or all of the following: accelerated program, such as completion of a bachelor's degree program in three years instead of the usual four; cooperative education, consisting of alternating terms (or shorter periods) of on-campus study and off-campus employment in jobs related to your major field; honors program, which means some kind of special arrangement for enriching or accelerating the education of exceptionally capable students; independent study, an arrangement in which you might pursue the study of some topic (or set of topics) on your own instead of attending classes and undertaking regular assignments; study abroad, which might be any one of several plans that lets you complete part of your college program—perhaps a whole year or a semester or summer session—studying in some other country; 3-2 liberal arts and engineering combination, a cooperative arrangement between a liberal arts college and a college of engineering that enables you to obtain degrees from both after three years of liberal arts study and two of engineering; or other special or unusual programs.

The next subhead that may appear, "Programs for students from minorities or low-income families," can be followed by such designations as the following: special counselor, pre-admission summer program, tutoring, remedial instruction, and reduced course load.

Under the subhead, "Military training," a college may have designated the availability of Air Force ROTC, Army flight training, Army ROTC, or Navy ROTC.

"Required freshman courses" is the subhead under which a college could specify any subjects in which courses are generally required of all freshmen. It is common for colleges to prescribe some part of the program for all their students and to let the students choose the rest according to their personal interests and goals. There are great differences among colleges, however, as to how much of a student's program is prescribed and how much is left to him to choose. As a general rule, the required subjects tend to be concentrated in the first year or two, with more freedom of choice offered as you progress.

Under "Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit" may be found a statement of the college's policy on the use of certain national and local programs of tests that many colleges use to determine what courses or course sections a student should be placed in, to counsel a student regarding his choice of subjects, and to grant college credit for what he already knows. For example, a college that has said here that "placement, credit, or both" is given on the basis of Advanced Placement Examinations may excuse a student from one or more of the "required freshman courses" mentioned above if he shows on these examinations that he has already learned the equivalent of what is generally learned in these freshman courses. More information about the most frequently used testing programs is given in the Glossary.

Colleges were asked to state, under "Academic regulations," what requirements freshmen must meet in order to continue in good academic standing. A college might say, for example: "Freshmen must obtain an average of C or 2.0 to enter their sophomore year in good standing, although students with lower averages may continue 'on probation' for one year during which their work must improve or they will be asked to withdraw from the college." Many colleges have also given information about the percentage of freshmen who typically satisfy their requirements of this kind.

Colleges with graduate programs were asked to list them next, designating only broad fields, to give prospective undergraduates this additional kind of clue to the interests and emphases in the faculty and student body. A student who was trying to decide where to enroll for graduate study might find this item useful initially but would surely need more detailed information about the graduate study offerings in various colleges as a basis for his choice.

There are many more questions that a prospective college student might ask about colleges' curriculums than can be answered by reading this section of even the most complete descriptive statements. You will use the information here to best advantage only for the preliminary identification of colleges that seem to offer the educational programs you are looking for—or, to put it another way, for the elimination of colleges from further consideration that clearly do not offer those programs. Having made a preliminary identification of likely colleges, you will want to go on to examine their catalogs for more detailed information about courses, faculties, requirements, and other aspects of curriculum that interest you.

Admissions. The next section of each statement is meant to give you useful information about both the procedures for seeking admission to the college and the chances that you will be admitted if you apply. In many cases, the information given in the college's statement is supplemented by tables in Part 2, showing how the admissions test scores and high school records of recent applicants to the college were related to their admission. In such cases, it would be best to read the admissions section of the statement and the relevant tables in Part 2 together.

"Applications in 1971" tells the number of students of each sex who applied and the number who were accepted. This gives you a very rough measure of the chances that you (or any other applicant) will be accepted, and in most cases you will find additional information to enable you to make a more reliable estimate of your own chances. For example, a college might report that 325 men applied and 325 men were accepted, giving you a clear indication that this college offers admission to all who apply. Another college might report that 3,946 applied and 1,215 were accepted, and you would see that fewer than half who applied were accepted, but you would need to read further for more information about how the college had selected those who were offered admission.

"Admissions requirements" lists both the tests and high school subjects generally required by the college of most applicants. Most colleges will waive or modify these requirements in the case of an applicant for whom they are impractical or otherwise inappropriate. If you do not meet all of the requirements stated by a college in which you are interested, you should not assume that the college would not accept you but should, instead, correspond with the college about your deficiency and other evidence of your qualifications that you might offer in its place. In the case of a college requiring "ACT or SAT" the order of listing is alphabetic and does not imply the college's order of preference.

Under "Basis for selection" colleges have given information about the relative importance they attach to various admissions criteria such as school achievement, test scores, interviews, activities, and recommendations. They may also have reported any minimum qualifications they require, such as rank in the top half of one's class, and any special consideration given to particular groups of applicants, such as children of alumni, foreign students, out-of-state applicants, and others. The significance of test scores in admissions may be further revealed in some statements by a report here of the SAT scores or ACT scores of the middle 50% of the applicants accepted for admission. You can compare your own scores with such a statement to determine whether you would stand among the middle half of the college's accepted applicants in this qualification or would be among those in the lowest quarter or the highest quarter.

Some colleges have used the term "open door" here to describe their admissions policy, meaning generally that they are open to all high school graduates and other adults without regard to their school record or other qualifications.

The rest of the section on admissions gives information about the procedures by which you apply for admission and the college acts on your application. Closing dates customarily refer to applications for admission to the fall term. This is also the place where colleges may have indicated that they follow special admissions procedures known as the Early Decision Plan (EDP) and the Candidates Reply Date Agreement (CRDA). These are defined in the Glossary and referred to later in this article under the heading, "When you hear from the colleges."

One purpose of the section on admissions is to enable you to judge whether or not particular colleges are in fact options that are available for you to choose—that is, whether or not you might reasonably hope to be admitted to them if you applied. In some cases the information in the colleges' statements will be sufficient for you to make this judgment quite surely. For example, the college that admitted all its applicants last year and that, as a matter of policy, admits all high school graduates leaves no room for question about your admission if you are a high school graduate. Similarly, the public institution that, as a matter of policy or necessity, admits no applicants from outside its own community is one you can be quite certain not to be admitted to if you are from some other place. In many colleges, however, admissions decisions are not so predictable, and the best you can do is estimate the chances that you would be admitted if you applied. In such a case, it would be a mistake to rule out an otherwise appropriate college from further consideration just because you estimated that your chances of being admitted were poor. Such an estimate is important in your planning—it would be most unwise, for example, to apply only to colleges where your chances of admission were slim—but you should probably never eliminate any college that you really want to attend just because you doubt that you will be accepted. In fact, if you want to go to a particular college very much, you will probably want to apply even if you estimate that your chances of admission are extremely remote.

Student life. The next section of each statement is intended to give you some idea of what it would be like to be a student at the college. It begins by describing certain characteristics of the freshman class—how many of each sex there are, what percentage of freshmen is from the state in which the college is located, what percentage lives on campus (in dormitories, fraternity and sorority houses, and other college-affiliated housing), what percentage commutes, what percentage is from minority backgrounds, and so forth. (If the percentage of freshmen living on campus and the percentage commuting do not add up to 100%, the remainder may be living off campus in private housing other than their family's homes.) Each reader will use such information in his own way, if at all, to think about how he would "fit in," how comfortable he would be, how stimulated he would be as a member of such a class.

"Programs undergraduates choose" introduces another kind of information that helps describe the students at the college. You might consider how your experience in college would be affected, if at all, by how many of the students there were in the same kind of program as you and how many had educational interests that were very different from yours. For example, if you were interested in engineering, you might find one college where 90% of the students major in that field and another college where the engineering students are a small minority like 10%. You might think that you would achieve best in the company of other students who were all interested in the same career field as you, or you might want your college life to include more association with students interested in other subjects and careers. Or you might not consider this an important matter at all. This kind of information about colleges is a matter of personal preference and judgment that only you can determine.

"Postgraduate studies" enables you to determine what proportion of the students in a college continue their education after graduating so you can compare your own plans with theirs. It would be reasonable to judge that, in a college where few graduates continued their education, the general emphasis among students and faculty would be different from that in a place where most students were preparing for graduate and professional studies.

The lists under "Student activities" and "Athletics" enable you to determine whether or not particular ones that interest you are likely to be available at various colleges. You may also read them as another representation of the interests and values of students attending these colleges, although such interpretations should be made cautiously because the listing of an activity here means only that it exists at the college and says nothing of its quality or importance there. Under "Athletics" are listed both intramural and intercollegiate sports. In the descriptions of coeducational colleges, each sport is available to both men and women unless it is followed by the letter M, meaning it is available only to men, or the letter W, meaning it is available only to women, or unless some other explanation is offered.

Other information in this section may include a listing of services for students, campus regulations, and other aspects of student life.

The importance of this section of the description to you depends on what you consider your important purposes in going to college. Many students attach great importance to the kind of life experience they will have during their college years, and they will search thoughtfully for clues to what the college's students are like, what opportunities exist for personal and social growth, how the college regulates and supervises its students' nonacademic lives if at all, and other aspects of life at the college. Other students consider these matters less important than, say, the curriculum, and they may find the information on student life less significant—useful, perhaps, in deciding between two otherwise equally appropriate colleges but not essential in selecting colleges that meet their basic requirements.

Annual expenses. This section gives roughly comparable figures from one college to another for most of the major items of student costs, reported by the colleges for the year 1971-72 or 1972-73. This information, perhaps more than any other, is subject to sudden and significant change, so you should use the cost figures here only for preliminary planning and should get the latest cost figures directly from colleges you seriously consider applying to.

"Tuition and fees" may be stated separately from "Room and board" or they may be quoted as a single amount called a "Comprehensive fee." Where the fees for residents of the state in which the college is located are different from the fees for nonresidents, a separate figure is reported for students from out of state. Occasionally separate figures are reported for students from in a district and out of the district.

"Other expenses" are defined as including typical costs for books, supplies, laundry, recreation, and so forth.

The one major item that is not shown here is the cost of travel between your home and the college—an item that can vary greatly from one student to another in the same college. You can make your own estimate of this cost for each college that you are considering and add it to the other costs reported in the college's statement to get a preliminary budget for one year at the college. Get actual plane, bus, or train fares or make careful estimates of your costs for travel by private car, according to the way you think you would travel and the number of trips you would be likely to make in your first year. If you are considering a local college to which you would commute from home, be sure to include an estimate of the costs you would incur for daily travel.

As a rule, you should not let the costs at a particular college deter you from considering it as one of your options if in other respects it is the kind of college you are interested in. Some colleges are now able, as they report in the financial aid section of their descriptions, to offer enough financial aid to make up the full amount of the difference between your costs and what you could pay for yourself.

Financial aid. This section gives information about the financial aid available at a college, how you apply for aid, and how it is awarded. The financial aid programs of most colleges now are designed to minimize the effect of costs as a factor in your choice of college. Colleges do this, if they can, by offering a student as much financial aid as he needs—but only as much as he needs—in addition to what he and his parents are able to pay. In this way, the cost to the student and his parents might be about the same at the various colleges he was considering—that is, as much as they could pay—and the differences in costs from one college to another would be reflected in corresponding differences in their financial aid awards to him. Many of the colleges have reported how many of their recent applicants who had financial need were offered the full amounts that they were estimated to need.

The financial aid administered by colleges consists principally of three types: grants (sometimes called gifts or scholarships), that do not require repayment; loans, which you are required to repay as a general rule, although certain loan programs waive the repayment for students who enter certain service occupations after graduation; and employment, which, ideally, is related to your intended field of study and career. Students in need of large amounts of aid are likely to receive awards that combine two or all three types to make up the needed amounts. For example, if you needed $2,200, you might be offered a grant of $900, a loan of $600, and a part-time job that paid $700.

The financial aid that colleges describe in their statements is only what they administer themselves. You might also qualify for aid from other sources, such as state and community scholarship and loan programs, employers or labor unions (either your own or a parent's), and other kinds of public and private financial aid programs. You should investigate all possible sources if you need aid. Your counselor can help you.

Correspondence. The last item in each statement is the name or office and address for you to use in corresponding with the college for further information and in applying for admission, financial aid, or both. In some statements, different addresses are indicated for admission and financial aid, and in some there is a different address that students from minorities and low-income families may use.

What is in Part 2?

Although the descriptions of individual colleges occupy most of the pages of this Handbook, there are three other important sections with information that you should know about. They are all in Part 2, which makes it especially easy to use those sections in connection with the college descriptions and to refer back and forth between them when considering related kinds of information about the same colleges.

One section contains tables showing test scores and school class ranks or grade averages of applicants for admission and enrolled freshmen at more than 600 individual colleges that have descriptive statements in Part 1. Some of these colleges also supplied a table, "Chances in 100 of obtaining selected grade averages," which enables you to determine what the chances are that a student with your test scores and class rank or grade average will obtain a freshman grade average of C or better and what your chances are for an average of B or better. A college's tables in this section of Part 2 are always meant to be read with its verbal description in Part 1, which may contain information that is an important supplement to its tabular data. The best way is to have Part 1 open to a college's verbal description when you are reading its tables in Part 2 and to refer to the verbal section on "Admissions" while reading the tables about applicants for admission and to the verbal sections on "Curriculum" and "Student life" while reading the tables describing enrolled freshmen. More is written about how to interpret and use the tables in the pages just preceding the tables in Part 2.

Another section of significant information in Part 2 is the master list of about 2,700 undergraduate colleges in the United States that met the criteria for inclusion in this Handbook with a separate descriptive statement. One criterion was the listing of the college in the United States Office of Education's annual Education Directory: Higher Education, which includes colleges accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or approved by a state department of education or a state university, colleges that have attained preaccredited status with a nationally recognized accrediting agency, and colleges whose credits have been accepted as if coming from an accredited institution by at least three accredited institutions. The other criterion for inclusion in the Handbook was the offering of some undergraduate programs, and institutions offering only graduate level curriculums were excluded.

The resulting master list will serve to inform you, therefore, of the existence of those colleges that did not return questionnaires and do not have descriptive statements in Part 1; the names of such colleges are printed in italics in the table. While most of those colleges are local institutions that lack accommodations and funds for students from outside their own communities, it would be wrong to conclude that all the colleges that did not supply descriptions for Part 1 are uninterested in applicants from communities other than their own. There are other reasons that some eligible colleges did not return the required questionnaire, so if you have reason to believe that such a college might be right for you, you should seek further information about the college from its own publications or from some other reference, such as one of those listed at the end of this introduction.

The arrangement of information in the master list was planned to make it serve as one convenient index to the descriptions. It shows whether a college supplied a descriptive statement and, if so, by what name its description is headed (and therefore in what alphabetic position it appears) in Part 1. The arrangement of the list by states enables you to determine quickly what colleges are located in each state. The additional information given about each one—whether it is a two-year or four-year college, whether it is for men or women or both, whether it is public or private, whether it is accredited by one of the regional associations of schools and colleges, and what its enrollment is—enables you to determine which colleges in a particular state or group of states may be of interest to you in the light of these characteristics. With the names of colleges found in this way, you can turn directly to their descriptive statements in Part 1 and their individual tables, if any, in Part 2 for more information. The miniature acorn preceding the name of a college means that it holds membership in the College Entrance Examination Board.

The other major section of Part 2 is the set of 51 maps showing the cities and towns in which colleges in the master list are located. There is a map for each state and one for Puerto Rico. The District of Columbia is shown on the map of Maryland. You can find the map location of any college by finding its name in the master list, noting the town in which it is located and its map coordinates (a capital letter and a number), then turning to the appropriate map, and looking for the name of that town in the square designated by those coordinates. You may also be interested in finding out what college or colleges are located in some city or town that you find on one of the maps—perhaps a place that is near a college you are considering—and you can do this easily by simply scanning its state in the master list for the name of the city or town and then noting what college is in it.

After you have found one or more colleges that seem right for you, your next task is to get admitted. How do you apply for admission to college? How many colleges should you apply to? When should you apply? How do you get financial aid? When will colleges let you know their decisions?

Many students wonder how many colleges they should apply to, and they hear conflicting advice about this from friends and family and even from their counselors and college admissions officers. Perhaps that is because there is no certain number of applications that is the right number for everyone. You may have decided that the college you most want to attend is one to which you can be very certain of being admitted, knowing that as a matter of policy the college admits all applicants that meet certain requirements that you have met. Moreover, assume that you would not need financial aid to attend this college. Under such circumstances, it would be hard to think of any good reason for you to apply to any other colleges in addition to this one.

On the other hand, your first choice of college might be one that you could not be sure of admission to, or perhaps one where you could be quite sure of admission but not very sure of the financial aid you would need in order to enroll there. Moreover, this may be a college that doesn't notify its applicants of its decisions on admission and financial aid until late in the year—too late for you to apply to the college that would be your second choice. In that case, you would certainly want to consider applying to your second choice as well as your first in order to protect your option of enrolling at the second in case you were unable to go to the first, either because you were not admitted or were not offered enough financial aid. Now, if your second choice of college were one to which you could be sure of admission and where you would need no financial aid, these two applications would be enough, and it would be hard to justify the expense of applying to any other colleges. However, your second choice, like your first, might be unpredictable as to your admission or financial aid or both, and its announcements of such decisions might be made too late in the year for you to initiate new applications to your next choice of college, in which case you would probably need to file a third application—and perhaps a fourth and a fifth. In sum, you should file as many applications as you need to—but only as many as you need to—to give yourself the best chance of being able to go to the college you would prefer after eliminating those that did not admit you or offer you necessary financial aid. That may be one application or it may be several, depending entirely on your own preferences and needs and on the admission and financial aid practices of the colleges you prefer.

The College Board Early Decision Plans (EDP) that some colleges follow, defined in the Glossary, may enable you to minimize the number of applications you file, at least temporarily, without reducing your chances of admission or financial aid at any of the colleges to which you would otherwise apply. The participating colleges have adopted these plans in order to make it unnecessary for well-qualified applicants to apply to more than one college if they can identify their first choices somewhat earlier than usual.

Applying for admission

The procedures for applying for admission vary from one college to another, but the usual first step is to get from the college its application form and instructions for applying. Thereafter, it is just a matter of following the instructions received from the college. You can obtain the necessary forms and instructions by sending one of the postcards that are bound into the Handbook to the address at the end of the college's descriptive statement (or to the director of admissions of a college given in the master list but not having a description in this book). If you exhaust your supply of postcards, a simple letter giving the same information as on the postcard will serve the same purpose.

Typically you will receive from the college an application form that asks for information about your background, previous education, and college plans. You may also receive a school record form to give to the proper person at your high school—your counselor or principal will tell you who that is—for the school to complete with a transcript of your courses and final marks, test scores, and possibly other information and observations about you that the college might use in deciding whether to offer you admission or later in counseling you about choices in your college program. Some colleges send this form directly to your school after receiving your completed application.

Your instructions from the college will also tell you when to apply, what the application fee is if there is one, what admissions tests you should take if any, and when you should take them. As a general rule you should apply as early as possible in the period specified by the college—that is, early in your senior year for most colleges, except for applicants under Early Decision Plans, who may apply late in the junior year or during the following summer. Colleges may state a closing date or deadline for applying (for example, "Apply by February 15"), but this is often no more than a guideline, and a college may cut off applications earlier than its final date if it fills its class before then, or it may continue to accept applications beyond that date if it still has room for more students. If you decide you want to apply to a college whose final date has passed, telephone or write to find out if it will still accept your application before you send it, especially if there is a fee.

Most colleges charge an application fee, usually not refundable even if your application is rejected. Many will waive this fee for applicants from low-income families, by which they usually mean those who are eligible for public assistance or benefits of federal antipoverty programs.

Most four-year colleges and some two-year colleges now require all their applicants to take one or more admissions tests as part of their application procedure. The most common practice is for the college to specify a particular test or combination of tests and to specify the latest date by which they should be taken. For example, a college may ask you to take the College Board Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) and three Achievement Tests (ACH) by January of the senior year. The major national programs of admissions tests are described in the Glossary.

Applying for financial aid

If the costs for you to attend an otherwise suitable college would be more than you and your family could pay, you can apply to the college for financial aid to make up the difference. The procedures for such applications, like those in applying for admission, vary from college to college. The best advice on this subject, therefore, is to get your instructions from the college itself and follow them carefully. The postcards bound into this Handbook can be used to request the necessary materials from the college, or you can write a brief letter for this purpose to a college's director of financial aid. If you are writing to the director of admission for other application materials, you may simply include in that letter another paragraph requesting materials on financial aid.

The usual procedure will include your completing and returning to the college a financial aid application form. In addition, most colleges will require that your parents submit a completed form such as the Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) explaining their financial circumstances, to be used by the college in estimating how much financial aid you would need to bridge the gap between what it would cost you to attend and what you and your parents could pay. The most widely used forms are described in the Glossary.

As a general rule, colleges will make their decisions about your admission without regard to your need, if any, for financial aid. If you are wondering whether or not applying for aid might reduce your chances of being admitted, the answer is probably not, although some colleges say that they would not offer admission to an applicant who needed a large amount of financial aid unless they could also offer him that aid.

When you hear from the colleges

Even after you have decided where to apply for admission and for financial aid if you would need it, you may still face some other decisions before your planning for college is completed. It may help you to know about some of the most common problems that can arise after you have submitted your applications to your chosen colleges.

If you apply for admission to more than one college, you may be admitted by more than one, and you will still have to decide which one to go to. If you have already determined your order of preference, and if financial considerations are not a factor in your choice (either because you do not need aid or because you received adequate offers of aid along with your offers of admission), your final decision may be relatively simple. However, if you have not already determined your order of preference or if financial or other factors cause you to reconsider that order, you may need to go through the process of deciding again. Can you specify your main objectives more clearly now than when you began choosing colleges? Can you get more information now than you had, or more than you used, when you first identified certain colleges for serious consideration? What other information would enable you to make better estimates of your chances of meeting your objectives? Perhaps your counselor can suggest where you might get that information. You should not be surprised or distressed, however, if all your efforts at deciding result in a field of two or more colleges which, as far as you can determine, offer you equal prospects of achieving your purposes. It is tempting to believe that for every student there is some college that would be his best choice, but it is probably closer to the truth that there are several colleges which are, as far as anyone can judge in advance, equally suitable for any particular student. If you find two or three that seem equally suitable for you, it probably means that you have done a good job of searching and studying, and it probably makes little difference which one of them you choose to enter.

Your problem may be more complicated if you are offered admission by your second choice of college and are asked to reply to that offer, perhaps with a substantial first payment on your tuition fee or dormitory charge, before you have received the admission decision from your first choice of college. This does not happen when the colleges you apply to are all participants in the Candidates Reply Date Agreement (CRDA), because these colleges agree not to require you to reply before May 1, ensuring that you will have the decisions of all the colleges you applied to before you have to reply to any of them. However, some colleges are not subscribers to that agreement, so you may face a difficult choice. Should you accept the earlier offer of admission from your second choice before hearing from your first choice, or should you risk the loss of your second-choice admission while you wait to hear from your first choice? Some students solve this problem by making the required first payment to the second-choice college, considering it a kind of insurance premium to cover the possibility of rejection by the first-choice college. Others have sometimes been able to get a preliminary, if unofficial, decision or other helpful advice from the first-choice college by writing or telephoning and explaining the problem to its director of admission. If you are faced with this problem, your counselor may be able to help you decide on a course of action.

Another common dilemma is to be accepted for admission without being offered the financial aid you need. A variation of this problem is to be accepted for admission by two or more colleges but to be offered aid in amounts that differed in the extent to which they bridged the gaps between costs and your resources. In either situation you would need to determine whether there were other resources you might tap for additional financial support so that you might in fact be able to attend a college whose offer of aid was less than you needed. If you could arrange for additional aid, you might still, in the second kind of situation, have to decide whether the additional financial burden you would have to assume to attend a preferred college was warranted by the strength of your preference for that college over another one whose financial aid offer to you was more nearly adequate. In such a dilemma, it would probably be very difficult for you to put a dollar value on your preference for one college over another, but if your choice comes down to this factor it will surely be preferable that you be the judge of value rather than someone else.

These are only a few of the most common problems you may encounter as you go through the processes of choosing colleges, applying for admission, applying for financial aid if you need it, and finally enrolling in the college you decide to attend. There are countless others, as you can imagine, with every college setting its own admissions requirements and procedures. Most of them can be solved, however, if you keep a cool head, keep your own purposes clearly in mind, study carefully the catalogs and other literature from colleges in which you are interested, and ask for help from your counselor and perhaps from the officers of the colleges involved in the problems.

Finally, it may help you to remember that most students develop strong attachments to the colleges they go to, even when the colleges were not their first choices at the time they were applying for admission. You will probably discover features in your college that are disappointing—almost everyone does—but there's a better than even chance that you will like your college more than you thought you would. On the other hand, you should also recognize that if things do not work for you—and there is always at least the small possibility that you and your college will prove to be badly mismatched—you can learn from the experience and go on to make another, and better, choice for your second year. Your decisions about college are important, and you should make them thoughtfully to give yourself the best chance. That may involve taking some risks and accepting the possibility that you will not always be right.

Glossary

When you plan for college you need to understand certain terms that are commonly used by colleges to describe their programs, admissions procedures, and financial aid policies. The definitions given here are necessarily general, and it is suggested that students consult the college catalogs of specific institutions in order to get more accurate, detailed, and up-to-date descriptions of the procedures, programs, and practices discussed.

Accelerated program. A college program completed in less than the time usually required, most often by attendance in summer or by carrying extra courses during the regular academic terms. Completion of a bachelor's degree program in three years is an example of acceleration.

Achievement Tests. College Entrance Examination Board tests in specific secondary school subjects, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. Colleges that require these tests of applicants may specify the subjects and dates. Used by colleges not only in deciding about admissions but also in course placement of enrolled freshmen.

Admission tests. See SAT, Achievement Tests, and ACT.

Advanced placement. Admission or assignment of a freshman to an advanced course in a certain subject on the basis of evidence that he has already completed the equivalent of the college's freshman course in that subject. In some cases the college may also grant academic credit for the college-level work that has been completed. See also Advanced Placement Program.

Advanced Placement Program (APP). A service of the College Entrance Examination Board that provides schools with course descriptions in college subjects and Advanced Placement Examinations in those subjects. Schools administer the examinations to qualified students, and several hundred participating colleges offer advanced placement, college credit, or both to students who obtain satisfactory grades. See also Advanced placement.

American College Test (ACT) Assessment. Test battery of the American College Testing Program, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. It includes tests in English usage, mathematics usage, social studies reading, and natural sciences reading. The composite score referred to in some colleges' descriptions and tables is the average of a student's scores on these four tests.

Associate's degree. The degree given for completing certain college programs of at least two but less than four years of study, usually in a two-year institution such as a junior college or community college.

Bachelor's degree. The degree given for completing certain undergraduate college programs that normally take four years. Also called the baccalaureate degree.

Calendar. The system by which an institution divides its year into shorter periods for instruction and awarding credit. The most common calendars are those based on semesters, trimesters, and quarters.

Candidates Reply Date Agreement (CRDA). A college subscribing to this agreement will not require any applicant offered admission as a freshman to notify it of his decision to attend (or to accept an offer of financial aid) before May 1. The purpose of the agreement is to give applicants time to hear from all the colleges they have applied to before they have to make a commitment to any one of them.

Career Planning Profile. A service of the American College Testing Program for institutions that emphasize vocational and technical education beyond high school. It consists of tests and questionnaires for use in educational and vocational guidance. Colleges that use it can provide information to students about when and where they should take it.

Certificate. An award for completing a particular program or course of study, sometimes given by two-year colleges instead of, or in addition to, associate's degrees.

Class rank. A student's approximate position in his graduating class, figured according to his grade average. It may be stated as a particular position, such as 75th (from the top) in a class of 350 students, or as some fraction of the class that he ranks in, such as the top one-third or the second one-fifth of the class.

College-Level Examination Program (CLEP). A service of the College Board that provides examinations in undergraduate college subjects and courses so that students and other adults may show educational attainment for which they have not previously received college credit. The examinations are used by colleges to evaluate the status of adult applicants who have not attended college (or not done so recently), students transferring from other colleges, and entering freshmen. They are also used by businesses, industries, government agencies, and professional groups to satisfy educational requirements for advancement, licensing, admission to further training, and other purposes.

College Scholarship Service (CSS). An activity of the College Board that provides colleges and scholarship agencies with an estimate of the amount of money an applicant's family might reasonably be expected to pay toward his college expenses. This estimate is based on information that the family has given about its income and assets and is sent to the colleges and agencies designated by the family. It is used by the colleges and scholarship agencies in determining how much financial aid [illegible]ay, an applicant will need in order to meet the full cos[illegible]ttending particular colleges.

College Work-Study Program (CWSP). A federally sponsored program that provides jobs for students with great financial need. The average amount earned by students under this program is about $600 per year. The jobs are available through colleges and public and private nonprofit agencies.

Comparative Guidance and Placement Program (CGP). This is a College Board program of aptitude and ability tests, questionnaires, and other services for two-year colleges and their students. Its purpose is to help a student make good decisions about his educational program and to help his college provide appropriate opportunities for him. It is usually administered to students by the college before, or at the time of, their enrollment.

Cooperative education. A college program in which a student alternates between semesters (or other periods) of full-time study and full-time employment in related work. The student is paid for his work at the prevailing rate. Typically, five years are required to complete a bachelor's degree program under the cooperative plan, but the graduate has the advantage of having completed about a year's practical experience in addition to his studies.

Direct Student Loan Program. A federally funded program, previously called the National Defense Student Loan Program, that provides loans of up to $2,500 for the first two years and up to $5,000 for the total undergraduate program. Repayment need not begin until you complete your education and any military service or service with the Peace Corps or VISTA. Repayment terms are favorable, and repayment may be partially or wholly waived if you go into certain kinds of employment.

Early admission. The practice of some colleges to admit certain students who have not completed high school—usually students of exceptional ability who have completed the junior year. See also Early decision, which should not be confused with early admission.

Early decision. Early decision plans are offered for applicants who are sure of the college they want to attend and are likely to be accepted by that college. An early decision application is initiated by the student, and he is notified of the college's decision earlier than he would be notified on its usual notification schedule—usually by December 1 of his senior year.

Early Decision Plan (EDP-F, EDP-S). Colleges that subscribe to this plan, which is sponsored by the College Board, agree to follow a common schedule for early decision applicants. Colleges may offer either a single-choice plan (EDP-S) or a first-choice plan (EDP-F). If a student applies under a first-choice plan, as soon as he is notified of acceptance by his first-choice college he must notify all other colleges to which he has applied that he is withdrawing his application. If he applies under a single-choice plan, he may apply to no other institutions until a decision has been reached on his application. If a college follows the Early Decision Plan, applications (including financial aid applications) must be received by a specified date no later than November 1, and the college agrees to notify the applicant by a specified date no later than December 1.

Educational Opportunity Grants (EOG). A federally sponsored program of financial aid for students with need. Basic Educational Opportunity Grants provide up to $1,400 for each undergraduate year. Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants may provide exceptionally needy students with additional amounts up to $1,500 a year. Both kinds of Educational Opportunity Grants are administered by the participating colleges, and students apply to the financial aid office of the college they plan to attend.

Family Financial Statement (FFS). A financial information form of the American College Testing Program's Financial Aid Services, used to estimate how much a financial aid applicant's family can pay toward his college costs and how much financial aid, if any, he would need to meet the costs at particular colleges that he designates.

Financial Aid Questionnaire (FAQ). A College Scholarship Service form used by some colleges to request financial information from families of financial aid applicants. It is intended primarily for use with low-income families, usually instead of the Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS), and enables the college to make a quick analysis of how much a family can pay toward the student's college costs. It is offered at no cost to parents.

General Educational Development (GED) tests. A series of five tests that adults who did not complete high school may take through their state educational system to qualify for a high school equivalency certificate or diploma. The tests are also administered at centers outside the United States (for information write to Commission on Accreditation of Service Experiences, American Council on Education, 1 Dupont Circle, Washington, D.C. 20036) and to members of the armed services through the United States Armed Forces Institute. The tests cover correctness and effectiveness of expression, interpretation of reading materials in the social studies, interpretation of reading materials in the natural sciences, interpretation of literary materials, and general mathematical ability. Many colleges accept satisfactory GED test results from certain applicants in fulfillment of their admission requirement of high school graduation.

Grade-point average. A system used by many colleges for evaluating the overall scholastic performance of students. It is found by first determining the number of grade points a student has earned in each course he completed and then by dividing the sum of all his grade points by the number of points of hours of course work he carried. His grade points for a course are found by multiplying the number of points or hours given for the course by his grade in the course. The most common system of numerical values for grades is: A = 4, B = 3, C = 2, D = 1, and E or F = 0.

Grade-point ratio. See Grade-point average.

Honors program. Any special program for very able students, usually offering the opportunity for educational enrichment, independent study, acceleration, or some combination of these.

Independent study. Any arrangement by which a student is allowed to complete some of his college program by studying independently instead of attending scheduled classes and completing group assignments. Typically the student plans his program of study, often on topics of his own choice, in consultation with a faculty adviser or committee, to whom he may report periodically and submit his final report for evaluation.

National Defense Student Loans (NDSL). See Direct Student Loan Program.

Open admission. The policy of a college to admit high school graduates and other adults generally without regard to conventional academic qualifications, such as high school subjects, high school marks, and admissions test scores. Thus, virtually everyone who applies is accepted.

Open door. See Open admission.

Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS). A form for families of financial aid applicants to use in supplying information about their income, assets, and other financial circumstances to the College Scholarship Service for use in estimating how much money a family might pay toward a student's college costs. See also College Scholarship Service.

Parietal rules. College regulations governing the conduct of students, especially on campus and in college buildings.

Pass-fail grading system. The practice of some schools and colleges to rate students' performance in their courses as either "pass" or "fail" instead of giving grades to recognize various levels of passing work.

Pre-admission summer program. Special program in which a student attends his college during the summer preceding his regular freshman year. The summer program may consist of remedial studies to strengthen his preparation for freshman courses, one or more of the regular freshman courses to enable him to carry a light schedule in the freshman year, or both.

Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT). A two-hour version of the College Board's Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) measuring verbal and mathematical abilities that are important in many college programs. The PSAT/NMSQT is administered by schools each year in October.

Quality-point average or ratio. See Grade-point average.

Quarter. A period of about 11 weeks, four of which comprise an academic year. In colleges following the quarter calendar, a student makes normal progress by attending three quarters each year. In some colleges a student can accelerate his program by attending all four quarters in one or more years.

Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC). Reserve Officers' Training Corps programs conducted by certain colleges in cooperation with the United States Air Force, Army, and Navy. Local recruiting offices of the services themselves can supply detailed information about these programs, as can the participating colleges.

Rolling admissions. The practice of a college to consider a student's application as soon as all the required credentials, such as school record and test scores, have been received and to notify him of its decision without delay. Colleges that follow this practice may make and announce their admissions decisions continuously over several months, in contrast to the practice of other colleges to accumulate their applications until late in the year and announce all their decisions at the same time.

Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). The College Entrance Examination Board's three-hour test of verbal and mathematical reasoning abilities, given on specified dates throughout the year at test centers in the United States and other countries. Required of all applicants by many colleges and sponsors of financial aid programs.

Semester. A period of about 17 or 18 weeks making up half of the usual academic year in colleges that follow this kind of calendar. See also Calendar, Trimester, and Quarter.

Student Financial Statement (SFS). A College Scholarship Service form to be used by graduate students and certain undergraduates who are financing their own education, for supplying financial information to support their application for financial aid.

Study abroad. Any arrangement by which a student is enabled to complete part of his college program—typically the junior year but sometimes only a semester or a summer—studying in another country. His own college may operate the campus abroad or it may have a cooperative agreement with some other American college or an institution of the other country.

Terminal program. An educational program to prepare students for immediate employment after completing it. The term usually refers to a program that takes less than four years beyond high school to complete, such as many of the programs in junior colleges, community colleges, and vocational-technical institutes.

Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). This test, sponsored cooperatively by the College Board and Educational Testing Service, is intended to help foreign students demonstrate their English-language proficiency at the advanced level required for study in colleges and universities in the United States. Many colleges require their foreign applicants to take the test as part of their admissions requirements.

3-2 liberal arts and engineering combination. Program in which a student completes three years of study in a liberal arts college followed by two years in an engineering college, at the end of which he is awarded the bachelor of arts and bachelor of science degrees, respectively, from the two institutions.

Transfer program. An educational program in a two-year college that is offered primarily for students who plan to continue their studies in a four-year college or university. See also University-parallel program.

Transfer student. A student who enrolls in a college after having previously attended one or more other colleges.

Trimester. A period of about 15 weeks, three of which, with breaks in between, fill a calendar year. A student makes normal progress by attending for two of the trimesters each year, and in some colleges he can accelerate his program by attending all three trimesters in one or more years.

University-parallel program. An educational program in a two-year college that is equivalent to the first two years of a similar program in a four-year college or university. The university-parallel program is designed to qualify a student for entrance to the third year of the four-year program with full credit for the two years already completed.

Upper-division college. An institution offering bachelor's degree programs that begin with the junior year. Entering students must have completed the freshman and sophomore years at other institutions.

Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP General and Subject Examinations. No maximum on semester hours of credit by examination which may be counted toward degree. Academic regulations: Student is placed on academic probation if his grade-point average falls below a 2.00 (C average). Freshmen are disqualified at the end of their first year if their grade-point average falls below 1.50. Graduate programs: Agriculture, anthropology, architecture, biological sciences, botany, business and commerce, computer science and systems analysis, corrections, education, English and journalism, fine and applied arts, geography, home economics, industrial arts, nursing, physical sciences, psychology, public administration, recreation, social sciences, Spanish.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 3,400 men and women applied; 2,071 were accepted. Admissions requirements: ACT or SAT by January of senior year. Combination of test scores on the ACT or SAT and grade-point average from the last 3 years of high school, excluding physical education and military science used as admissions criteria. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission who took the SAT had SAT-verbal scores between 460 and 510 and SAT-mathematical scores between 400 and 480. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission who took ACT had ACT composite scores between 16 and 24. Application fee: $20, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications November 30, applicants notified of decisions by February, accepted applicants must reply by August 1. Transfer applicants: About 6,000 apply annually, and 3,500 are accepted. Apply by November 30 for fall term. Transfers need to be eligible on basis of high school record or have 60 semester hours in community college with a 2.00 grade-point average. Out-of-state students need a 2.40 grade-point average. All except remedial and high-school-level courses accepted. Exception made in strictly vocational areas that have no parallel program in the state college system. Additional information: College uses the common admissions system established by the California State Colleges through the chancellor's office.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 797 men, 935 women. 99% from California, 25% live on campus, 10% commute, .01% from minority backgrounds. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 22%, engineering 1%, education 6%, business 8%, agriculture 3%, home economics 1%, fine arts 19%, health services .5%, religion .1%, professional studies 17%, natural science 8%. Postgraduate studies: 20% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government, student newspaper, magazine, yearbook, radio, television, film, Newman Club, drama, opera or musical theater, dance, symphony orchestra, marching band, concert band, Young Republicans, Young Democrats, social service organizations (tutoring, "Bridge" emergency counseling program, Blue Key–men, Cardinal Key–women), fraternities, sororities, veterans club. Athletics: Archery, baseball, basketball, bowling, cross-country-M, fencing, field hockey-W, football-M, golf, gymnastics, handball-M, rugby-M, skiing, soccer-M, softball, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, water polo-M, wrestling-M. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni. Regulations: Approved housing for freshmen and sophomores.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $80; out-of-state students $1,100. Other expenses: $350.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs, NDSL, EOG, CWSP Law Enforcement Education Program, nursing grants and loans. 275 accepted freshman applicants were judged to have need; 260 of these were offered aid; 260 of these were offered the full amounts they were estimated to need. Basis for selection: All financial aid awarded on the basis of financial need. All students demonstrating financial need are eligible to receive assistance as long as they are enrolled in college as regular students. Therefore, grade-point average and test scores have no bearing on an applicant's eligibility for financial assistance. Application procedures: Closing date for applications when funds are depleted, generally April 1; applicants notified of decisions within 90 days of date financial aid application has been completed; recipients of aid offers must reply within 10 days of award notification. PCS required. College's financial aid questionnaire required for students from families with annual income below $6,000. Transfer students: Will receive priority for aid as continuing applicants from programs at institution from which transferred.

Claremont Men's College, Claremont, California

Four-year private nonsectarian liberal arts college for men. Undergraduates: 800 men. Calendar: Semester. Location: Suburban community 35 miles from Los Angeles. Special features: One of the Claremont Colleges (which also include Claremont Graduate School, Harvey Mudd College, Pitzer College, Pomona College, and Scripps College) sharing use of library system (700,000 bound volumes; over 5,000 periodicals), 2,500-seat concert hall, theater, bookstore, and other facilities of a size usually found only in a university. Students in Claremont Men's College may take courses in the others. Faculty-student ratio is 1 to 12.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Art (fine arts), biological sciences (biology), business and commerce (accounting), English and literature (literature, speech), foreign languages (French, German, Spanish), history, mathematics, philosophy and religion (philosophy), physical sciences (chemistry, physics), psychology, social sciences (economics, political science), other (Asian studies). Special programs: Accelerated program, honors program, independent study, study abroad, 3-2 liberal arts and engineering combination (management-engineering with Stanford University). Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Pre-admission summer program, tutoring, reduced course load. Courses available in black studies, Mexican-American studies, and urban studies are open to all students. Military training: Army ROTC optional. Required freshman courses: English composition, social studies, mathematics, physical education, science, humanities. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP Subject Examinations. Academic regulations: Anyone with a grade-point average below 2.0 is not in good standing, but only 1%-2% of all students fail each year.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 890 men applied, 540 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT by March of senior year. ACH urged but not required. High school English 3 units (4 if possible), foreign language 2, mathematics 2 (3 for those interested in mathematics or science majors). Courses beyond these should be in the 5 college preparatory fields. Interview recommended. Basis for selection: The most important criterion for predicting a candidate's academic performance in college is his past academic performance. The majority of the college's entrants have stood in the top tenth of their high school classes and most were in the top fifth. However, a student who is attending a secondary school that is selective, a school which sends nearly all of its candidates on to college, might be accepted even if he has lower rank. The majority of the entrants have College Board scores in the 600s and 700s, but many score in the 500s, and usually about 10% score in the 400s or even the 300s. Leadership in school or community activities weighs strongly, since most Claremont graduates eventually enter fields where leadership is important. The college seeks a diverse student population and gives some preference to candidates who represent ethnic minorities or who have had unusual backgrounds or experiences. Application fee: $15, may be waived for applicants with unusual financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications: preference is given to those who apply by February 1 and complete credentials by March 1; applicants notified of decisions from April 1-5; accepted applicants must reply by early May. CRDA. Early decision is available to a candidate who completes credentials by December 15. Transfer applicants: About 100 apply annually, and 60 are accepted. Preference is given to those who complete credentials by May 1. College transcript most important. Credit is given for any course taken at an accredited institution, if the course has a reasonable equivalent in the college's curriculum, and if the grade was C or better.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 220 men. 60% from California, 90% live on campus, 1% commute from home (9% live off-campus, many of them married), 20% from minority backgrounds. Only 1%-2% of the entire college population fails academically each year. The freshman class grade-point average is usually about 2.7 (A = 4); the average for all students is slightly higher. Freshmen who stood below the top tenth and had College Board scores in the 500s or 400s usually earn B's and C's, but some make the dean's list (3.0 or better). Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 100%. About half the students major in economics or political science, aiming toward careers in business, law, government, politics, and similar fields. Postgraduate studies: 70% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government (students manage many aspects of their conduct and activities and are members of nearly all faculty committees), student newspaper (3 issues per week), yearbook, radio, center for religious activities (all faiths served in nearby churches and temples), drama, symphony orchestra, pep band, concert choir, Young Republicans, Young Democrats, Black Student Union, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, social service organizations (volunteer service), forensics. Athletics: Baseball, basketball, cross-country, football, golf, handball, lacrosse, rugby, sailing, skiing, soccer, softball, squash, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, water polo, wrestling. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni. Regulations: Any student must have permission to live off campus. Additional information: Frequent varied events at Claremont Colleges (total student population of 5,000). 1 women's college and 3 coeducational colleges adjacent.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $2,619. Room and board: $1,280. Other expenses: $500.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs. NDSL, EOG. All freshman applicants for aid who were offered aid were offered the full amounts they were estimated to need. Basis for selection: Both academic and nonacademic qualifications are considered. 50% of college funds are awarded to black and Mexican-American students. Application procedures: PCS should be received by March 1, applicants notified of decisions from April 1-5, recipients of aid offers must reply by early May. PCS required. Transfer students: Usually about 80% of accepted transfer candidates can be aided. PCS should be received by May 1. Additional information: Grant amounts of $200-3,500 are renewed if recipient earns satisfactory record.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Chemistry, engineering, mathematics, and physics. Special programs: Honors program, independent study. Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Pre-admission summer program, tutoring; courses in black studies, Mexican-American studies, urban studies open to all students. Military training: Army ROTC optional. Required freshman courses: Freshman year program for all students consists of mathematics, natural philosophy (chemistry and physics), and quest for commonwealth (humanities and social sciences course dealing with man and his problems). Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will sometimes be given on basis of Advanced Placement Examinations. Academic regulations: Freshman grades are high pass, pass, and no credit. All may continue if they wish; those with no credits make them up. Finally, about 2% to 3% of the student body fails each year. Graduate programs: Engineering (engineers may take a fifth year of engineering and earn M.E. degree). Additional information: One-third of every student's course work is in humanities and social sciences.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 560 men applied, 260 were accepted; 35 women applied, 18 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT by March of senior year, ACH (mathematics Level II) by March of senior year. High school English 3 units (4 if possible), foreign language 2, mathematics 4, science (chemistry or physics, but preferably both). Courses other than these should be in 5 college preparatory fields. Interview recommended. Basis for selection: No able student of sound character who has strong interest in mathematics and science should be discouraged from applying because of some statistical deficiency. The most important criterion for predicting academic performance in college is past academic performance; evidence of this is more important than test scores. Nearly all of the college's entrants have stood in the top tenth of their high school classes. They have always earned top grades in mathematics and science, and they have rarely, if ever, done badly even in other areas. Most score in the 600s and 700s on the SAT-mathematical section, although now and then a candidate can be accepted with a score below 600. The majority score in the 600s and 700s in the SAT-verbal section as well, but many score in the 500s and a few in the 400s. Leadership in school or community activities, unusual accomplishment in a scientific area, a special talent, or exceptional drive in some constructive activity (a hobby for example) may influence a decision favorably. The college also seeks a diverse student population and gives some preference to candidates who represent ethnic minorities or who have had unusual backgrounds or experiences. Application fee: $15, may be waived for applicants with unusual financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications: preference is given to those who apply by February 1 and complete credentials by March 1; applicants notified of decisions from April 10–15; accepted applicants must reply by early May. CRDA. Early decision is available to a candidate who completes credentials by December 15. Transfer applicants: About 20 apply annually, and 5–7 are accepted. Apply by May 1 for fall term. Other requirements and procedures: College transcript most important. Credit is given for any course taken at an accredited institution if the course has a reasonable equivalent in the college's curriculum and if the grade was C or better.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 110 men, 10 women. 60% from California; 95% live on campus; 1% commute from home; 4% live off campus, many of them married; 15% from minority backgrounds. Only 2%–3% of the entire college population fails academically each year. The average for all students is about 2.9; approximately half make the dean's list (3.0 or better). Programs undergraduates choose: Engineering 32%, chemistry 17%, mathematics 20%, physics 29%. Postgraduate studies: 70-80% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government, student newspaper—3 issues per week, yearbook, radio, center for religious activities (all faiths served in nearby churches and temples), drama, symphony orchestra, pep band, concert, and choir, Black Student Union, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, social service organizations (volunteer service), forensics. Athletics: Baseball, basketball, cross-country, football, golf, handball, lacrosse, rugby, sailing, skiing, soccer, softball, squash, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, water polo, wrestling. All sports listed are for men students only. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni. Regulations: Students must have permission to live off-campus. Additional information: Frequent varied events at Claremont Colleges (total student population of 5,000). 1 women's college and 3 coeducational colleges adjacent.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $2,760. Room and board: $1,100 for men; $1,310 for women.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs. NDSL, EOG, CWSP. All freshman applicants judged to have need were offered the full amounts they were estimated to need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications: PCS should be received by March 1, applicants notified of decisions from April 10-15, recipients of aid offers must reply by early May. PCS required. Transfer students: Any who are accepted and have need are awarded the financial aid they need. PCS should be received by May 1. Additional information: Grant amounts of $200-3,500 are renewed if recipient earns satisfactory record.

Immaculate Heart College, Los Angeles, California

Four-year private nonsectarian liberal arts college for men and women. Undergraduates: 250 men, 400 women. Graduates: 9 men, 43 women. Calendar: Semester (one 15-week term and one 21-week term), summer session. Location: Metropolitan area. Special features: College highly progressive; students hindered only by their own limitations. Professors who consider teaching their most important responsibility are not suspect.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Art (history, serigraphy), biological sciences (bacteriology, biochemistry, marine biology, zoology), communications (film), education (elementary, secondary), English and literature (English, literature), foreign languages (French, German, Spanish), health and medical professions (medical technology), history and cultures (American, ancient, European), mathematics, music (composition and theory, instrumental, history, voice), philosophy and religion (philosophy, religion, theology), physical sciences (chemistry, physics), psychology (experimental, general, social), social sciences (economics, political science, sociology), theater arts (drama, theater arts), other (social relations – combination of psychology, sociology, and economics). Special programs: Accelerated program, honors program, independent study, study abroad (European studies and foreign language programs approved by departments). Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Special counselor. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP General and Subject Examinations. Academic regulations: Grade-point average of 2.0 (on 4.0 scale) constitutes good academic standing. Approximately 90% of freshmen complete year in good academic standing. Graduate programs: Biological sciences, library science, religion. Additional information: Students encouraged consciously to choose their college programs. Such conscious choice can be based only upon student's ability to see far enough into self and future to describe individual needs and academic goals. Counseling process attempts to help each student explore these needs and goals and to discover possible alternatives before making academic decisions.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 581 men applied, 235 were accepted; 576 women applied, 252 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT by January of senior year. SAT only 1 factor in considering an applicant for admission; it is not the most important. Specific units not required; college preparatory program recommended. Interview recommended. Basis for selection: College looking for enthusiastic and self-motivated students, as evidenced through high school performance, recommendations, interviews, test scores, and self-evaluations which might indicate potential for growth. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 625 and 575 and SAT-mathematical scores between 625 and 575. Application fee: $20, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Rolling admissions, closing date for applications September 1, applicants notified of decisions 2 weeks after file is complete, accepted applicants must reply 3 weeks after notification. CRDA. Transfer applicants: About 150 apply annually, and 80 are accepted. Apply by September 1 for fall term. Other requirements and procedures: SAT or 30 college units required. 30-unit residency requirement. General admissions procedure same as for freshmen; credit given for all previous academic work successfully completed. Additional information: Qualified students may be admitted after junior year of high school. Student's self-evaluation as important as any other single factor in reaching admissions decision.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 84 men, 137 women. 70% from California, 65% live on campus, 35% commute. Middle 50% of enrolled freshmen have SAT-verbal scores between 625 and 575 and SAT-mathematical scores between 625 and 575. Freshmen very academically oriented, but noncompetitive with each other for grades. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 100%. Postgraduate studies: 45% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Town hall community government (involves students, faculty, administration), student newspaper, film, drama, musical theater, dance, orchestra, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, Black Student Union. Athletics: Softball, swimming and diving, tennis, 4,000-acre park next to college at which riding, hiking, golf, and so forth are available year-round. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, apartment listings. Regulations: Of particular interest to students is fact that college has no "Mickey Mouse" rules. Additional information: Social life quite informal and intimate. Rather than organized functions, college's activities tend to vary each year. Many are spontaneous.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $2,025. Room and board: $1,025. Other expenses: $600.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs. NDSL, EOG,

Nairobi College, East Palo Alto, California

Two-year private nonsectarian predominantly black college of arts and science for men and women. Undergraduates: 283 men and women. Calendar: Quarter, summer session. Location: Suburban community.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: The college does not offer degrees, but transfer programs are available for students who want to transfer to 4-year schools. Fields of study: Ethnic studies (black or African studies). Special programs: Cooperative education, independent study. Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Special counselor, pre-admission summer program, tutoring, remedial instruction, reduced course load.

Required freshman courses: English composition, foreign language, history or social studies, mathematics, science. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: College has its own placement tests in mathematics and English. Academic regulations: Students remain in good standing as long as they meet expectations of class attendance and performance.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 61 men applied and were accepted; 108 women applied and were accepted. Admissions requirements: Placement tests in English and mathematics. No admission requirements as to previous education. Basis for selection: As a black community school, the college excludes no one who indicates a desire to attend. The philosophy of the college states what is expected from students, and if an applicant is willing to meet these expectations, he is accepted into the school. Emphasis at the college is on community involvement and service. Students are encouraged to participate in the community at the same time that they are engaged in getting a basic education. Applicants understand this and are accepted if they indicate their intention of becoming involved. Application fee: None. Application procedures: Closing date for applications September 1, applicants notified of decisions within 2 weeks of date application is received. Transfer applicants: About 30 apply annually, and 30 are accepted. Apply by September 1 for fall term. Since the college does not give degrees, transfer credits are not important. Transcripts are obtained only as an aid in counseling students who may wish to transfer to 4-year schools and to see a student's scholastic background.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 61 men, 108 women. 90% from California, 100% commute, 100% from minority backgrounds. Programs undergraduates choose: Because Nairobi is a 2-year school, most students do not choose majors until they transfer to a 4-year college or university. Postgraduate studies: 35% of graduates enter 4-year programs. Student activities: Student government, student newspaper, magazine, drama, dance, concert band, college singing group, college jazz combo, community concerts and cultural programs. Athletics: Basketball-M, bowling, karate. Student services: Counseling, student employment service for undergraduates, tutoring. Additional information: Full-time students are required to do volunteer community service in various community agencies and projects. There is no campus housing.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $600. Other expenses: $75.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Loans, jobs. NDSL, EOG, CWSP. 147 accepted freshman applicants were judged to have need, 147 of these were offered aid. Basis for selection: All applications are reviewed, and if a student meets the government's criteria of need, aid is offered. The offer is based on income, expenses, and available resources. No academic qualifications are presently considered other than that a student be in good standing and in full-time attendance. Application procedures: Closing date for applications September 1, applicants notified of decisions within 2 weeks of submitting applications. Transfer students: Requirements and procedures are the same as for freshman applicants.

Pomona College, Claremont, California

Four-year private nonsectarian college of arts and science for men and women. Undergraduates: 740 men, 605 women. Calendar: Semester. Location: Metropolitan area of suburban community 35 miles from Los Angeles. Special features: Pomona is founding member of the Claremont Colleges now numbering 5 undergraduate and 1 graduate college on a single campus. While a Pomona College student lives and works primarily in his home college, there are opportunities for enrollment in courses offered by the other colleges and for sharing in use of common facilities and in social and intellectual life of group as a whole.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Art (history, studio), biological sciences (biochemistry, biology, botany, zoology), computer science and systems analysis (computer science), English and literature (creative writing, literature), ethnic studies (black or Afro-American, Mexican-American), foreign languages (Classical languages, Eastern languages, French, German, Spanish), history and cultures (American, ancient, area and regional, European), mathematics (statistics), military science (military science-army), music (composition and theory, instrumental, history, voice), philosophy and religion (philosophy, religion), physical sciences (astronomy, chemistry, geology, physics), psychology, social sciences (anthropology, economics, international relations, political science, sociology), theater arts (theater arts), other (Asian studies, the classics). Students may formulate their own interdisciplinary majors. Special programs: Honors program, independent study, study abroad (independent study in 1 of approximately 30 countries), 3-2 liberal arts and engineering combination, exchange programs with Fisk University, Swarthmore College, and California Institute of Technology, Washington Semester. Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Special counselor, pre-enrollment summer program, tutoring. Military training: Army ROTC. Required freshman courses: Physical education. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Academic regulations: Grade-point average of C or better required for freshmen to continue in good standing. 95% of freshmen complete year in good academic standing. Additional information: Interdisciplinary major, liberal arts major. Limited pass-no credit grades (up to about 45%). Limited cross-registration in other Claremont Colleges (up to one-third of all courses over the 4 years), program in public policy studies. Variety of independent study options can lead to over half the work of the junior and senior years taken independently.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 911 men applied, 423 were accepted; 855 women applied, 270 were accepted. Admissions requirements: ACT by December of senior year or SAT by January of senior year. High school English 4 units, social studies 2, foreign language 3, mathematics 3, science 2. Above are recommended, not required; exceptions to this pattern are not rare. Basis for selection: Academic achievement, test scores, and recommendations from the school most important. Special skills in music, art, drama, and athletics also important. Personal strengths and evidence of leadership and motivation given weight. In considering applications of economically deprived or minority students, less weight may be placed on traditional measures of academic ability in favor of other evidence of potential more appropriate to candidates' experience. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission who took SAT had SAT-verbal scores between 690 and 570 and SAT-mathematical scores between 720 and 600. Application fee: $20, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications February 1, applicants notified of decisions by April 15, accepted applicants must reply by May 1. CRDA. Transfer applicants: About 282 apply annually, and 127 are accepted. Apply by May 1 for fall term. Other requirements and procedures: SAT or ACT required. Most admitted transfers have B average in previous college. Transfer students must spend 4 semesters as Pomona students. Only arts and sciences courses with C grade or better are accepted for transfer. Additional information: Because considerable weight is placed on nonquantitative evidence of intellectual and personal strength, each applicant should take care that his application materials fairly represent his interests and abilities. In recent years the principal factor leading to an offer of admission was nonacademic in about 4 cases out of 10. Another 3 of 10 admissions were considerably influenced by nonacademic factors. This should be kept in mind especially by economically deprived or minority students interpreting the Pomona College tables on admission in Part 2.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 186 men, 150 women. 60% from California, 97% live on campus, 3% commute, 20% from minority backgrounds. Middle 50% of enrolled freshmen who took SAT have SAT-verbal scores between 690 and 560 and SAT-mathematical scores between 715 and 575. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 100% (one-third each in the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences). Postgraduate studies: 60% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Faculty-student committees, judiciary, college policy review council, student newspaper, magazine, yearbook, radio, college church, Campus Crusade, Meditation Society, new underground and denominational groups for Christian Scientists, Mormons, Catholics, and Jewish students, drama, dance, symphony orchestra, pep band, college choir, men's and women's glee clubs, chamber and rock groups, Claremont Union (debate), Students for Environmental Action, Zero Population Growth, Student Mobilization Committee, Young Socialist Alliance, Model United Nations, Black Students Union, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, volunteer service center (tutoring and hospital work) American Field Service, recording for the blind, draft counseling, Pomona Day School (run by Black Student Union), social organizations. Athletics: Badminton, baseball-M, basketball, cross-country-M, fencing, field hockey-W, football-M, golf-M, lacrosse-M, rugby-M, skiing, soccer-M, softball, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, volleyball, water polo-M, wrestling-M. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for graduates and alumni. Regulations: Freshmen must live on campus or at home. Other students usually receive permission to live in nondiscriminatory off-campus lodgings. Autos must be registered with college. Additional information: Social regulations are minimal and set by each residence hall. Most residence halls are coeducational.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $2,500. Room and board: $1,400. Other expenses: $500.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans. NDSL, EOG, CWSP. About 350 accepted freshman applicants were judged to have need, all of these were offered aid, all of these were offered the full amounts they were estimated to need (in combination of loan and grant). Basis for selection: Financial aid based exclusively on need. College has met need of all admitted students in recent years. Application procedures: Closing date for applications February 1, applicants notified of decisions by April 15, recipients of aid offers must reply by May 1. PCS required. Transfer students: College has been able in recent years to meet the need of the majority but not all accepted transfers with a combination of loan and grant.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Art, biological sciences (biology-mathematics), business and commerce (business management and administration), education (physical education), English and literature (English), ethnic studies (black or Afro-American, Mexican-American), foreign languages (French, German, Spanish), geography, health and medical professions (nursing–registered), history and cultures (European studies, India studies), mathematics, music, philosophy and religion (philosophy), physical sciences (chemistry, geology, physics), psychology, social sciences (anthropology, economics, political science, sociology), theater arts, other (liberal studies, expressive arts, urban studies). Special programs: Cooperative education, independent study, study abroad, community involvement, Center for the Performing Arts. Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Special counselor, tutoring, Educational Opportunity Program (Hidden Talent Project). Required freshman courses: All students are required to complete 40 units of general education in the areas of humanities, social science, natural science, ethnic studies, mathematics or logic, physical education, and electives. Foreign language required for some majors. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will sometimes be given on basis of Advanced Placement Examinations. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP General and Subject Examinations. Academic regulations: Well over 90% of freshmen complete year in good academic standing. Students must maintain a C average (2.0).

Generally speaking, students who fall below a C average are given one semester to raise it to a C. Graduate programs: Biological sciences, education (with the exception of physical education, which is offered as both graduate and undergraduate course, all education courses are offered as graduate programs—elementary, secondary, special, preschool, counseling, and pupil personnel), English, foreign language (Spanish), mathematics, psychology, social sciences (history, political science).

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 1,310 men and women applied, 834 were accepted. Admissions requirements: ACT or SAT by January. Basis for selection: Eligibility is determined by high school grade average and results of either ACT or SAT. A weighted combination of these 2 measures provides an eligibility index. California high school graduate must have an index placing him in the top third of California high school graduates. Out-of-state students must have an index equivalent to the top sixth. Special admission requirements govern applications to the Educational Opportunity Program (Hidden Talent). Applications from out-of-state and foreign students are encouraged. The mean SAT-verbal score for fall 1970 freshmen was 531; the SAT-mathematical mean was 507. The mean composite ACT score for fall 1970 freshmen was 23. Application fee: $20, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications November 30, applicants notified of decisions on rolling admissions basis, accepted applicants must reply within 15 days. Transfer applicants: About 2,400 apply annually, and 1,200 are accepted. Apply by November 30 for fall term. Other requirements and procedures: no transfers at freshman and sophomore level accepted. Graduates holding a baccalaureate degree from an accredited college or university may enroll as unclassified students. Requirements for admission to particular degree and credential programs vary.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 600 men and women. 98% from California. In fall 1972, campus town house became available for 400 students. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 55%, business management 5%, fine arts 7%, science and mathematics 14%, undeclared 19%. Student activities: Television, film, Newman Club, Christians on Campus, Universal Life Church of the Aquarian Age, Kundalini Yoga Club, Christian Science, Bahai Fellowship, drama, opera or musical theater, dance, symphony orchestra, Rhymers Club, Student Committee on Underground Movies, Whatever, Can You Dig It, political organizations (Front Lash, Peace Action Committee, Committee for Prisoner Rehabilitation and Justice, Political Action Club, Model United Nations), Black Student Union, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, social service organizations (community involvement project, tutorial services), social organizations. Athletics: Baseball-M, basketball, cross-country-M, fencing, field hockey-W, football-M, gymnastics-W, sailing, softball, tennis, track and field-M, volleyball-W, wrestling-M. Student services: Counseling and testing, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni, housing, activities, academic advising, international student advisement. Additional information: The removal of student body government by student referendum has tended to enhance close student-faculty relationships in matters of governance and in campus life. Students are expected to play a much more sophisticated role in campus affairs than the traditional notion of "student activities." Every student is encouraged to establish his own level of commitment and involvement in campus affairs.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $140; out-of-state students $1,240. Room and board: $1,200. Other expenses: $695; in addition transportation averages $225.

United States Coast Guard Academy
New London, Connecticut

Four-year federal Armed Forces military academy for men. Undergraduates: 1,000 men. Calendar: Semester, 8-week summer professional program. Location: Small city 103 miles from Boston, 127 miles from New York City. Special features: This military service academy functions as a humanitarian arm of the Department of Transportation in time of peace and as a highly specialized segment of the United States Navy in time of war. The Coast Guard Academy graduate must serve a minimum of 5 years as a Coast Guard officer. However, 4 years at the Coast Guard Academy's 100-acre campus and subsequent commission as an ensign in the Coast Guard offer many satisfactions to young men who enjoy variety and excitement, are interested in technical and administrative work, and have an essentially idealistic and humanitarian outlook on life.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: The constantly updated academy curriculum offers liberal arts, engineering, and professional subjects and a choice of 13 academic options that include: general, ocean, marine, electrical, nuclear, and civil engineering; mathematics; computer science; ocean science; physics; chemistry; history–government; and economics–management. These areas of academic interest combined with the varied elective courses, establish a solid foundation for a challenging career. Special programs: Honors program, independent study, summer cruise to foreign ports for sophomores and seniors. Academy Scholars Program offers a special intellectual challenge to cadets in their fourth year who have demonstrated outstanding scholastic abilities. Those selected are given special recognition and academic privileges that enable them to pursue, under faculty guidance, individually selected projects and special research. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP Subject Examinations. California Psychological Inventory, Edwards Personal Preference Schedule, Minnesota Counseling Inventory, Strong Vocational Interest Blank, Survey of Interpersonal Values, Survey of Study Habits and Attitudes used for counseling. Academic regulations: Fourth classmen (freshmen) who fail to attain a quality point average of 1.6 will be placed on academic probation. 96% of the freshman class completes the year in good academic standing. Graduate programs: Biological sciences; Coast Guard officers are currently enrolled in the following advanced and specialized courses—business and commerce, engineering, mathematics, physical sciences; other (aircraft maintenance, Air War College, Armed Forces Staff College, humanities, law, management, merchant marine industry training, national war college, naval war college, operation analysis, public administration). Additional information: Except for a few weeks' leave, the summer term is devoted to professional training. Training cruises visit many of the historic and beautiful ports of the world and permit cadets to obtain a thorough foundation in practical seamanship, ordnance and gunnery, small arms and communications. They participate in battle problems, search and rescue drills, and learn to control and fire all the primary weapons found on the cutters. They apply their theoretical knowledge of seamanship, handle small boats, and observe the handling of larger vessels. Upperclassmen navigate ships and, as Officer of the Deck, command the watch, applying theoretical knowledge from the professional studies classroom and practical seamanship on smaller craft. If not on the cruise, professional training ashore at various service training centers and operating units adds to general military knowledge and creates contacts with personnel of other branches of the Armed Forces.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 7,547 men applied, 606 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT and ACH by December of senior year. English Composition and Level I or II Mathematics ACH required. Must be 17 but not have reached the age of 22 by July 1 of year to be admitted. Must be a citizen of the United States at the time of entry. Must be unmarried and never have been married. A candidate's background must demonstrate positive evidence of good moral character, responsibility, trustworthiness, and emotional stability. Must be physically sound and not less than 5 feet 4 inches or more than 6 feet 10 inches in height. He must successfully undergo a qualifying medical examination. He must be a high school graduate from an accredited high school by June 30 of the year of entrance. When he is appointed, a cadet agrees to serve 5 years as an officer in the Coast Guard after graduation from the academy. High school English 3 units, mathematics 3 units (to include algebra, plane or coordinate geometry, or their equivalent), 7 additional units generally from academic fields required and 2 units from other areas for a total of 15 units. Interview required for finalists, recommended for applicants. Basis for selection: The competition for appointment as cadet is based on the candidate's high school rank, his performance on the SAT and ACH, and his leadership potential (as demonstrated by his participation in high school extracurricular activities, community affairs, or part-time employment). Most successful candidates rank in the top half of class and demonstrate a high degree of proficiency in the mathematical and scientific academic areas. The Coast Guard Academy is the only one of the Armed Forces service academies that tenders appointments solely on the basis of an annual nationwide competition. There are no congressional appointments, as at the other academies, and no geographical quotas. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 510 and 611 and SAT-mathematical scores between 611 and 690. Application fee: None. Application procedures: Closing date for applications December 15 of senior year, applicants notified of final results by April 9, accepted applicants must reply by May 1. Transfer applicants: Very few apply and few accepted. Other requirements and procedures: All must begin as freshmen. Requirements are the same as for regular, first-time applicants.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 330 men. 4% from Connecticut, 100% live on campus. Middle 50% of enrolled freshmen have SAT-verbal scores between 510 and 611 and SAT-mathematical scores between 611 and 690. Postgraduate studies: 60% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government, magazine, yearbook, radio, religious organizations (Officer Christian Union, Knights of Columbus, Christian Science Campus Organization, Fellowship of Christian Athletes, DeMolay, Inter-Academy Christian Fellows Group and the Lay Leaders Class meet for weekly vespers), drama, formal and informal dances, dance orchestra, marching band, concert band, choir, glee club, drum and bugle corp, social sailing, concerts, lectures, professional demonstrations, science exhibits, toastmasters affiliation organization, social service organizations (Big Brothers of America, Halfway House for drug addicts, tutoring programs for the disadvantaged, companionship programs for the crippled and mentally retarded). Athletics: Badminton, baseball, basketball, bowling, cross-country, football, golf, gymnastics, handball, pistol, rifle, rowing, sailing, skiing, soccer, softball, squash, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, volleyball, wrestling, yacht racing. Student services: Counseling, health services, placement service for graduates and alumni (all graduates placed as career officers in the Coast Guard). Regulations: All cadets must attend chapel at the academy or church of his choice once a week. All cadets are required to live in dormitories (barracks). Only seniors are authorized to maintain automobiles. Cadets may not marry until they have graduated.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Deposit of $300 is required, one-third due upon acceptance of appointment, and the balance on arrival. A cadet receives more than $2,510 a year plus a daily food allowance. A cadet's pay is not a wage or salary; it is money furnished by the government for uniforms, equipment, textbooks, and other expenses incidental to his training. Cadet pay covers all the cadet's expenses and is disbursed and expended only as directed by the Superintendent. No cadet may contract any debt or receive financial assistance from home or elsewhere without permission of the Superintendent of the Academy. Any funds remaining in a cadet's account are given to him when he graduates.

FINANCIAL AID. Scholarships received by the applicants may be used towards the $300 deposit. All cadets receive a full four-year scholarship.

CORRESPONDENCE. Director of Admissions, United States Coast Guard Academy, New London, Connecticut 06320.

University of Bridgeport, Bridgeport, Connecticut

Four-year private nonsectarian university for men and women. Undergraduates: 3,475 men, 3,206 women. Graduates: 1,387 men, 870 women. Calendar: Semester, summer session. Location: Small city. Special features: The university's advantageous location in a large progressive city has enabled it to use urban resources as a "living laboratory," supplementing the academic facilities of its 6 colleges. It is growing rapidly and is unhindered by restrictive tradition. A responsive philosophy designed to meet the growing demands on higher education is reflected in the role played by the university senate. Students and faculty members contribute significantly to policy-making decisions.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Associate, bachelor. Fields of study: Art (art history, graphic arts, printing), biological sciences (biology, marine biology, physiology, zoology), Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP Subject Examinations. Academic regulations: Freshmen must maintain a C average to make normal progress. About 75% of freshmen complete year in good academic standing. Graduate programs: Biological sciences, business and commerce, education, engineering, English and journalism, foreign language and literature (French only), health professions (nursing), mathematics, physical sciences (physics and chemistry), psychology, social sciences.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 2,960 men applied, 1,700 were accepted; 4,440 women applied, 2,700 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT by January of senior year, English Composition (foreign language, Level I Mathematics in some instances) ACH by March of senior year. ACH used for placement only. High school English 4 units, social studies 1, foreign language 0-2, mathematics 2-4, science 1-2. Interview recommended. Basis for selection: Applicants are evaluated on the basis of academic success in secondary school, performance on the SAT, and recommendations. There are no inflexible minimums in terms of class rank or test scores but 50% of all admitted students stand in the top third of their graduating class with SAT scores totaling over 1000. No geographical quotas are applied. A program for disadvantaged students is available. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 445 and 500 and SAT-mathematical scores between 450 and 550. Application fee: $15, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications August 1, applicants notified of decisions on rolling admissions basis, accepted applicants must reply within 2 weeks. Transfer applicants: About 1,200 apply annually, and 600 are accepted. Apply by June 1 for fall term. Students with at least a C average from regionally accredited institutions are normally admitted and receive appropriate credit for courses in which a C has been earned.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 600 men, 800 women. 20% from Connecticut, 60% live on campus, 40% commute, 3% from minority backgrounds. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP Subject Examinations. Academic regulations: Each freshman must complete at least 8 full courses during the first academic year. Overall academic average must be 70 (C−) or higher. 97% of freshmen achieve sophomore standing. Graduate programs: Biological sciences, education, English and journalism, fine and applied arts, foreign language and literature, mathematics, philosophy, physical sciences, psychology, religion, social sciences, ethnomusicology. Additional information: It is possible for an individual student to arrange a course personally on a tutorial basis if a topic in which he or she is interested is not dealt with by a regularly scheduled course. In some years as many as 1,300 tutorials have been offered for full academic credit.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 1,800 men applied, 550 were accepted; 1,100 women applied, 280 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT by January, senior year; English Composition Achievement Test plus any other two by January, senior year. The Achievement Tests are used for purposes of admissions as well as placement. Results of tests taken before the senior year are acceptable. No one test is more highly regarded than another. Entering freshman expected to have had experience in scientific method, quantitative reasoning, historical analysis, linguistics, and very sound preparation in reading and writing. Interview required. Basis for selection: Admissions decisions are based primarily on scholastic considerations. Any characteristic - whether conventional or unconventional—which would indicate that a person would be able both in aptitude and attitude to use Wesleyan fully would be predominant in an admissions decision. All persons seeking admission are considered in terms of their educational backgrounds. Personal strengths and character are of significant importance always. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 650 and 749 and SAT-mathematical scores between 635 and 745. Application fee: $20, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications February 1, applicants notified of decisions third Saturday in April, accepted applicants must reply two weeks after notification. CRDA. EDP-F. Transfer applicants: About 500 apply annually, and 35 are accepted. Apply by May 1 for fall term. Other requirements and procedures: same as for freshman applicants except for difference in dates and fact that scholastic information comes from previous college rather than high school. The number of persons to be admitted each year by transfer depends on the availability of space. In some years, no space has been available for transfer students. Credit is given for all courses in the liberal arts and sciences.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 275 men, 161 women. 13% from in-state, 90% live on campus, none commute, 14% from minority backgrounds. Middle 50% of enrolled freshmen have SAT-verbal scores between 650 and 749 and SAT-mathematical scores between 635 and 745. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 100%. Postgraduate studies: 65-75% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government (students have control of all social functions, publications, and extracurricular activities; students also are represented on the University Senate and its committees), student newspaper, magazine, yearbook, radio, religious organizations (The University Ministry and Wesleyan Havurah), drama, dance, symphony orchestra, small musical groups, brass and string ensembles, choirs, glee clubs, and a jazz group, ethnic organizations (Ujaama for black students and Ajua Compos for Latin students), social service organizations (almost all activities are part of Wesleyan Volunteers, whose activities include tutoring, breakfast programs, day care centers, summer camp, legal services and personal counseling), fraternities. Athletics: Baseball-M, basketball, cross-country-M, field hockey-W, football-M, golf, gymnastics-W, handball, ice hockey-M, lacrosse, rowing (crew), rugby-M, skiing, soccer-M, softball, squash, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, wrestling-M. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni. Regulations: Freshmen allowed to maintain automobiles on campus, parking facilities available. Freshmen must live in university residences. No curfews or parietal regulations. All social regulations determined by students. Additional information: Campus atmospheres and attitudes are informal and casual. Although the student body is very diverse, the general mood among students is one of mutual interest, goodwill, and tolerance. Social affairs are not structured or exclusive.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $2,700 plus $225. Room and board: Average is between $1,200-$1,300. Other expenses: $700.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs (optional—a student is not required to accept an offer of a job in lieu of loan or grant aid). NDSL, EOG, CWSP. 189 accepted freshman applicants were judged to have need, 189 of these were offered aid, 189 of these were offered the full amounts they were estimated to need. Basis for selection: All financial aid awards are based on need. Computations of financial need do take note of particular circumstances of each student and his family. All estimates of financial need include student's personal expenses while at Wesleyan and travel expenses. Application procedures: Closing date for applications February 1, applicants notified of decisions third Saturday in April, recipients of aid offers must reply no earlier than May 1. PCS required. A financial aid application is included as part of the application for admission. Transfer students: Financial aid is available to transfer students on basically the same basis as it is to freshmen. Additional information: Although jobs are not included in financial aid awards, they are plentifully available on campus. A student could reasonably expect to earn between $300 and $1,000 per year through campus employment, which would not impede his or her studies. Students with financial need are given priority in the assignment of campus jobs.

Gallaudet College, Washington, D.C.

Four-year private nonsectarian liberal arts college for men and women. Undergraduates: 536 men, 483 women. Graduates: 18 men, 59 women. Calendar: Semester, summer session. Location: Metropolitan area. Special features: Gallaudet is a liberal arts college for persons with severe hearing impairment.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Art (art history, commercial art, studio art), biological sciences (biology, zoology), business and commerce (accounting, business management and administration, finance), computer science and systems analysis (computer science, data processing), education (education of the deaf, physical education), English and literature (English, literature), foreign languages (French, German, Russian, Spanish), history and cultures (American, European), home economics (clothing and textiles, family relations, food and nutrition), library science, mathematics, philosophy and religion (philosophy, religion), physical sciences (chemistry, physics), psychology (general), social sciences (economics, political science, social work, sociology), theater arts (dance, drama). Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Pre-admission summer program, tutoring, remedial instruction, reduced course load. Required freshman courses: English composition, foreign language, history or social studies, physical education, science. Academic regulations: An average of at least 70 is required as evidence of satisfactory work. Students with a grade average below 70 for any semester are placed on academic probation. 2 semesters on academic probation results in academic dismissal. Graduate programs: Audiology, education, education of the deaf. Additional information: In addition to the 4-year college curriculum, college provides remedial assistance in the form of a 1-year preparatory program. This is undertaken by most entering students.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 379 men applied, 190 were accepted; 360 women applied, 186 were accepted. Admissions requirements: College entrance examination; adequate SAT or ACT scores are accepted but most applicants take college examination. Since most students spend 1 year in preparatory program, college does not require specific high school units. Basis for selection: Entrance examination scores are most important, followed by secondary school recommendations. Grades and rank in class are of less importance. Since college admissions standards are quite flexible and substantial financial aid is available, a minority or low-income student with potential has little difficulty gaining admission. Application fee: None. Application procedures: Closing date for applications February 1, applicants notified of decisions by May 1, accepted applicants must reply by June 1. Transfer applicants: About 35 apply annually, and 25 are accepted. Other requirements and procedures: if student's record is inadequate, he must submit acceptable SAT or ACT scores or demonstrate suitability by scores on college tests. Transfers admitted on same basis as first time students; credit is given for courses equivalent to college's in which a grade of C or better is obtained. Additional information: Policy of the college is to screen applicants "in" not "out." Interested in providing an educational opportunity for any deaf student who has the potential to succeed.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 154 men, 143 women. Student body reflects a normal national distribution. Students from 18 foreign countries currently enrolled. 95% live on campus, 5% commute, 6% from minority backgrounds. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 82%, business 4%, home economics 5%, fine arts 3%, library science 4%, physical education 3%. Postgraduate studies: 10% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government (representation on decision-making bodies of college, some students on selection committees), student newspaper, magazine, yearbook, television, religious organizations (all major denominations), drama, dance, fraternities, sororities. Athletics: Archery, baseball-M, basketball, bowling, cross-country-M, field hockey-W, football-M, golf-M, gymnastics, soccer-M, softball-M, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field-M, wrestling-M. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni. Regulations: All students (except preparatory) may operate motor vehicles on campus. No alcoholic beverages or firearms permitted.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $675. Room and board: $1,200. Other expenses: $300.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs. NDSL. Basis for selection: All students are eligible for support from state vocational rehabilitation agencies. Most receive this in varying amounts. College provides supplementary grants-in-aid if vocational rehabilitation support is inadequate. These are based on need. Transfer students: Transfer students receive financial aid on the same basis as regular students.

CORRESPONDENCE. Bernard L. Greenberg, Director of Admissions and Records, Gallaudet College, Washington, D.C. 20002.

George Washington University, Washington, D.C.

Four-year private nonsectarian university for men and women. Undergraduates: 2,877 men, 2,741 women. Graduates: 5,450 men, 1,527 women. Calendar: Semester, summer session. Location: Metropolitan area. Special features: The atmosphere is very much one of interaction with Washington, D.C. Students realize that education also takes place in research, employment, and nonacademic pursuits outside of campus activities. 76% of the professors have their doctorate degrees, and virtually no courses are taught by teaching assistants. The relationship between students and professors is very good.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Bachelor. Fields of study: Art (art history, design, graphic arts, photography, studio art), biological sciences (biology, botany, zoology), business and commerce (accounting, business management and administration, finance, marketing, transportation and commerce), communications (journalism), computer science and systems analysis (computer science, data processing), education (art, elementary, music, physical education, secondary), engineering (civil, electrical, mechanical), English and literature (creative writing, English, literature, speech), foreign languages (Classical languages, Eastern languages, French, German, Italian, Russian, Spanish), geography, health and medical professions (medical technology), history and cultures (American, area and regional, European), mathematics (statistics), music (composition and theory, instrumental music, music history, voice), philosophy and religion (philosophy, religion), physical sciences (chemistry, geology, oceanography, physics), psychology (experimental, general), social sciences (anthropology, economics, foreign service, international relations, political science, public administration, sociology), theater arts (dance, drama), oceanography, speech pathology and audiology, geodetic and cartographic science, special education, environmental health, environmental engineering, Chinese studies, American studies, Latin American studies. Special programs: Accelerated program, cooperative education (cooperative engineering education program, alternating work and study), honors program, independent study, sophomore year in Paris, intern programs. Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Special counselor, pre-admission summer program, tutoring, reduced course load. Program limited to District of Columbia residents who receive financial aid, tutoring, counseling, remedial instruction. Military training: Air Force ROTC voluntary 2-year program offered at Catholic University, Washington, D.C. Required freshman courses: English composition. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP General Examinations except in English composition. Student must be out of school for at least three years. Credit will also generally be given on basis of CLEP Subject Examinations. Both examinations must be passed at 50th percentile or better. Maximum of 30 semester hours of credit by examination may be counted toward degree. Special examinations are offered by departments. Academic regulations: Two grades of "fail" in one semester place student on probation. 85% of freshmen complete year in good academic standing. Approximately 77% of freshmen return for sophomore year. Graduate programs: Biological sciences, business and commerce, city planning, computer science and systems analysis, education, engineering, English and journalism, fine and applied arts, foreign language and literature, geography, health professions, law, mathematics, philosophy, physical sciences, psychology, religion, social sciences, health care administration, medical school, forensic science, genetics, international affairs, linguistics, Sino-Soviet studies, public administration, management science, pharmacology, biochemistry, microbiology, American studies, physiology. Additional information: Students may select double majors or may create their own interdisciplinary majors from courses in any of the departments. Exceptional students may graduate with a B.A. or B.S. after 90 hours rather than attending the full 120 hours. The consortium allows George Washington students to take courses at Georgetown, American, Howard, and Catholic Universities and receive credit at George Washington.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 1,827 men applied, 1,649 were accepted; 1,567 women applied, 1,409 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT by January of senior year. English Composition ACH; mathematics ACH for engineering applicants. Prefer both tests by January of senior year. English Composition ACH, used primarily for placement, may be taken as late as May of senior year. High school English 4 units, social studies 2, foreign language 2, mathematics 2, science 2, mathematics 3½ for engineering applicants. Group information session for applicants conducted twice daily at the university. Basis for selection: In evaluating applications, factors considered in order of importance: school achievement record, test scores, recommendations, school and community activities. Admission requires strong academic program with above average grades, rank in top two-fifths of graduating class, and College Board test scores in mid to upper 500s. Admission criteria and procedures are generally the same for all applicants. Educational Opportunity Program offers academic and financial assistance to minority and poverty-level residents of Washington, D.C., whose record or test scores may not meet the usual criteria. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 500 and 650 and SAT-mathematical scores between 475 and 700. Application fee: $25, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Closing date for applications March 1, applicants notified of decisions prior to April 15, accepted applicants must reply by May 1. CRDA. EDP-F. Transfer applicants: About 2,200 apply annually, and 1,600 are accepted. Apply by June 1 for fall term. Students with fewer than 30 semester hours at the time of application must submit secondary school record and College Board test scores. CLEP scores may be required in some cases to support borderline credentials. C or better average in academic subjects in a balanced program taken at an accredited college required. Credit normally assigned for work at an accredited institution if completed with grades of C or better. Additional information: Each application is given individual evaluation; special attention is given to applicants who do not precisely meet the requirements given above. In such cases additional testing, letters of explanation, or information from the high school may be required.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 580 men, 415 women. 20% from greater Washington area, 79% live on campus, 21% commute, 5% from minority backgrounds. lums with assistance from faculty advisor. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Academic regulations: Freshmen must attain a quality ratio of 1.75 in the first semester to remain in good standing and a 2.00 at the end of the second semester to remain in good standing. 93-95% of the freshmen complete the year in good standing. Graduate programs: Education.

ADMISSIONS. Applications in 1971: 353 women applied, 298 were accepted. Admissions requirements: SAT and 3 ACH of the candidate's choice. Tests are used only for placement. High school English 4 units, social studies 1, foreign language 4, mathematics 3, science 1, academic electives 3. The above are guidelines; any candidate who has another combination of 16 academic units will be considered. Interview highly recommended. Basis for selection: Student's high school record, rank in class, and recommendation from counselor are of primary importance in the admissions process; College Board test scores are used for placement purposes and as an indication of student's standing on a national basis. Special consideration is given to low-income minority students. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 570 and 620 and SAT-mathematical scores between 535 and 585. Application fee: $15, may be waived for applicants with financial need. Application procedures: Rolling admissions policy, applicants notified of decisions 3 weeks after completion of credentials, accepted applicants must reply by May 1. CRDA. Transfer applicants: About 25 apply annually, and 20 are accepted. No deadline for applications for fall term. Transfer students who have a 2.5 average on a 4.0 scale are considered for admission and are given credit for as many as 64 credit hours in academic subjects. No credit is given for D grade.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 150 women. 10% from commuting area, 90% live on campus, 8% commute, 18% from minority backgrounds. Middle 50% of enrolled freshmen have SAT-verbal scores between 550 and 600 and SAT-mathematical scores between 535 and 585. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 100%. 40 to 50% of graduates (of four-year programs) enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government (student association), student newspaper, magazine, yearbook, radio, religious activities board, drama, glee club, political affairs club, black student alliance, social service organizations (service committee). Athletics: Archery, basketball, dancing, field hockey, golf, gymnastics, horseback riding, softball, swimming and diving, tennis. Student services: Counseling, health services, student employment service for undergraduates.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Comprehensive fee: $3,400.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs. NDSL, EOG, CWSP. 150 accepted freshman applicants were judged to have need, 130 of these were offered aid, 100 were offered the full amounts they were estimated to need. Basis for selection: Financial aid decisions are made almost entirely on the basis of need. College attempts to meet the entire need for minority groups and poverty-level income groups. Application procedures: Rolling admissions policy, applicants notified of decisions 3 weeks after completion of credentials, recipients of aid offers must reply no earlier than May 1. PCS required. Transfer students: Same requirements and procedures as for all other students.

Clayton Junior College, Morrow, Georgia

Two-year public community junior college for men and women. Undergraduates: 1,474 men, 726 women. Calendar: Quarter, summer session. Location: Suburban community 15 miles from Atlanta, Georgia.

CURRICULUM. Undergraduate degrees offered: Associate. Fields of study: Agriculture, art (studio art), biological sciences (biology), business and commerce (accounting, business management and administration, secretarial studies), communications (journalism), education (art, business, elementary, health, physical, secondary), English and literature (English, literature, speech), foreign languages (French, German, Spanish), health and medical professions (dental hygiene, laboratory technology, medical technology, nursing-registered, pharmacy), history and cultures (American, European), mathematics, music, philosophy and religion (philosophy), physical sciences (chemistry, physics), psychology, social sciences (correction administration, economics, police science, political science, sociology). Special programs: Cooperative education, study abroad (in cooperation with the University System of Georgia). Programs for students from minorities or low-income families: Special counselor, remedial instruction, reduced course load. Required freshman courses: English composition, history or social studies, mathematics, physical education, science. Tests used for counseling, placement, or credit: Placement, credit, or both will generally be given for grades of 3 and higher in Advanced Placement Examinations. Credit will generally be given on basis of CLEP General and Subject Examinations. Maximum of 30 quarter units of credit by examination may be counted toward degree. Departmental examinations used for counseling, placement, credit. Academic regulations: A freshman who has attempted at least 45 quarter units must maintain a minimum acceptable cumulative average of 1.7 or better to remain in good academic standing. Additional information: The college currently offers 35 college transfer majors plus 6 career programs (criminal justice, dental hygiene, medical laboratory technology, nursing, paraprofessional teacher assistance, secretarial studies).

ADMISSIONS. Admissions requirements: SAT by July. High school English 4 units, social studies 2, mathematics 2, science 2. Each applicant's transcript is evaluated individually according to his future academic goals. High school diploma or general equivalency diploma acceptable. Basis for selection: Clayton Junior College employs a policy of selective admissions whereby a student's high school record is evaluated in conjunction with SAT scores to determine probability of academic success. If the credentials indicate weaknesses in English, mathematics, or reading, the student is admitted to the developmental program. Middle 50% of applicants accepted for admission had SAT-verbal scores between 450 and 550 and SAT-mathematical scores between 425 and 500. Application fee: None. Application procedures: Closing date for applications 20 days prior to registration. Transfer applicants: Apply by 20 days prior to registration for fall term. A transfer student with a 2.0 or higher college grade-point average is admitted in good standing. Those with less than a 2.0 average are considered by the admissions committee. Hours are transferred in courses that are appropriate to the core curriculum of the University System of Georgia and if the grade attained is a C or better.

STUDENT LIFE. Freshman class: 1,474 men, 726 women, 98% from Georgia, 100% commute, 10% from minority backgrounds. Programs undergraduates choose: Liberal arts 50%, engineering 1%, education 17%, business 30%, fine arts 1%, health services 1%. Postgraduate studies: 98% of graduates enter graduate or professional programs. Student activities: Student government, student newspaper, yearbook, drama, musical ensemble, political organizations, ethnic organizations, social service organizations, athletics. Student services: Counseling, student employment service for undergraduates, placement service for graduates and alumni.

ANNUAL EXPENSES. Tuition and fees: $258, for students from out-of-state $528. Other expenses: $100 for books.

FINANCIAL AID. Aid offered: Grants, loans, jobs. NDSL, EOG, CWSP. Basis for selection: All students must be in good academic standing to receive aid. Awards are based on need as determined by PCS or SFS, plus other extenuating circumstances; out-of-state tuition is higher, therefore, those students would need more; low-income groups would naturally qualify first for educational opportunity grants. Application procedures: Closing date for applications about 5-6 weeks before term begins, applicants notified of decisions as soon as applications processed, recipients of aid offers must reply 10 days before term starts. PCS or SFS required. FAQ also used in special cases. Transfer students: Procedures are same as for regular freshmen.
